WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION

There are people who love the mountains and people who love the sea, but for people who love both, there are the Azores. Roughly 2,400 miles east of Boston (and 1,000 miles off the coast of Europe), they're a volcanic archipelago that sits on its own tectonic plate. Some people believe they're the origin of the myth of Atlantis, which doesn't seem so far-fetched once you see them. Like King Kong's island, they rise abruptly out of the deep blue Atlantic, shrouded in mist and covered in lush vegetation, with a temperate climate, cascading waterfalls, dramatic rock formations, sharp promontories, high peaks surrounding deep lakes in extinct volcano craters, a profusion of flowers, and holes in which sulfurous, 160-degree water bubbles up from the earth's crust.

First settled in the 1400s, they've been a major maritime crossroads ever since and remain an autonomous region of Portugal. They consist of nine islands; in 1811 a tenth island emerged and was promptly claimed by England—only to sink back into the ocean a month after the Union Jack was planted on it.

Their capital, Ponta Delgada, is on the largest island, São Miguel, where I spent a week. Although the most common sight is the odd cow or hydrangea, there's plenty more to see, and one way to do it is on horseback. I rode a Lusitano, the famed Portuguese breed, through breathtaking countryside, and although my ass felt like ground beef for days, the scenery was worth it. I visited the lakes, most memorably Sete Cidades, a place straight out of a fairy tale: two lakes, side by side, one distinctly green, the other distinctly blue. The legend is that a princess fell in love with a shepherd, but her father, the king, wanted her to marry a prince. She was allowed to say goodbye to the shepherd one last time, and their tears formed the lakes: hers blue and his green. I swam in the ocean where a thermal vent created God's own hot tub, and I ate a tasty lunch that was cooked in a volcanic pit for six hours. I visited tea and pineapple plantations, and saw art treasures ranging from the sublime—a figure of Christ wearing a solid gold crown of thorns with rubies and diamonds—to the faintly ridiculous—a diorama of Bible scenes made in the 19th century by a nun using nothing but breadcrumbs, egg white and gum Arabic. But one of the most thrilling things that happened (and by no means could I be mistaken for a sports fan) was when Portugal beat the Netherlands in the World Cup. The Portuguese striker, Pauleta, grew up on São Miguel, and even for an island where every day is some sort of festival, the place went berserk.

From the Azores, I flew to Lisbon. In addition to gawking at the sights—the Moorish Castle of St. George, the Manueline Monastery of Jeronimos and Tower of Belém—I spent an evening carousing in the alley-like streets of the Barrio Alto and another sitting in the 15th-century palace of the Counts of Linhares, in a high-ceilinged room lit only by candlelight, sipping white sangria and listening to achingly beautiful fado music. I visited Sintra, an impossibly picturesque town, and the Palace of Queluz, a rococo confection. However, one of the highlights of Lisbon came when Portugal beat England in the World Cup, and the city erupted with honking and screaming that lasted all night.

South of Lisbon is the Costa Azul, a stretch of coastline studded with beaches, bustling fishing villages and some positively operatic scenery, like Cabo Espichel—an escarpment overlooking the ocean with an 18th century lighthouse and a lonely windswept church—and Arrabida—a natural park of limestone mountains tumbling down to the sea. One afternoon, I ate one of the largest and most memorable meals of my life: a shrimp course, followed by mussels, calamari, sardines, Dover sole, sea bream, red mullet, halibut, salad, vegetables and dessert, all (needless to say) accompanied by wine. I rode a bicycle in the rain down steep cobblestone streets and past bucolic farmland, toured the famed winery of Jose Maria da Fonseca, and spent an afternoon with the dolphins of the Sado River estuary. We were stopped by the maritime police for venturing too close to a bird sanctuary, and then, the next afternoon, we were stopped by police again on a mountain road overlooking the exact spot where our boat had been pulled over. (T time it was because a car commercial being filmed up ahead.)

My final destination was the Algar It's very beautiful, once you dodge the s burned Northern Europeans getting dr in towns like Albufeira, where I had only unpleasant encounter: an extrao narily rude hotel employee who was surly he could've run a bed and breakfas Vermont. In fairness, it might have b because Portugal was eliminated from World Cup earlier in the evening, and said, the Algarve does have unspo places like Tavira and Fuzeta, gorge towns where water shuttles travel to rier islands with magnificent beacl There are also five-star hotels in upsc towns like Vilamoura—a cross betw Palm Springs and Portofino, with eno golf courses to satisfy the worst golf b and a big marina full of mega-yachts. A four days there, I drove back to Lisbon flew home, sorry to say good-bye to such astonishingly beautiful country.

I hope to see more of the Azores Portugal someday. But in the meantim know who I'll be rooting for in the World Cup. IB

ARTS TOWN

Letting go of summer isn't easy in New England, but one tactic Pollyanna would approve of is to focus on the good stuff the cooler weather brings. In arts-rich Boston, fall signals a return to culture, as theaters and concert halls reopen and museums bounce back from the tourist season with new exhibitions. In this issue, we give you the heads-up on some of the most interesting concerts, shows, performances and developments to come in the next few months, from the much-anticipated opening of the ICA's striking new home on the waterfront to the Kirov Ballet's performance of the classic Swan Lake at the Wang. If you enjoy the arts at all, you've got to feel lucky to live in a town with so many world-class options.

We're all also lucky that the awesome Chris Cooper, who graces our cover this issue, chose acting over his other considered career: ranching. The Oscar winner talks to Jonathan Soroff about the movies and his life—far away from Hollywood's madness—on Boston's South Shore.

IT'S ALL BAD

Not that I'm pleased, but it's now very apparent that over the past year you've succeeded in transforming what was once an enjoyable magazine to read into something more suited for the bottom of a bird cage. I used to enjoy reading it, but the most recent issue (Fall Fashion Preview, Aug. 30) proves once and for all what kind of readers you're hoping for. The text hardly matters anymore, since your target audience is mostly looking photos of pricey Newbury Street gooc Even Ezra's column was crappy. (Satir best left to those who do it well, rathe people who don't but think they do.) sign this, but chances are I won't kno you print it, because there's really no to ever pick up a copy of your magazi the future.

NEW IN TOWN

All Star Is Born

Chris Schlesinger tells clever stories about the driving force behind All Star Sandwich Bar, the 34-seat shrine to the sandwich he opened this month in Inman Square—a few doors down from his always-hopping East Coast Grill. "The sandwich had suffered a blow with the Carbs Are Bad movement," goes one version. "It was time to bring it back." Version B (oft-quoted by local journalists) recounts some heated debate with family and business partners over whether the "wrap" can legitimately be called a sandwich. "No, a sandwich has two or more separate pieces of bread," Schlesinger firmly holds, giving All Star's strict wrap-free policy the final word.

Yet tales of fad diets and sandwich taxonomy seem beside the point—nicely crafted sound bites meant to divert attention from what's really going on here: This guy is a certified sandwich fanatic. History backs it up. Years ago, Schlesinger became so obsessed with a favorite sandwich from his Virginia childhood—pan-fried softshell crab on white toast—that he included the recipe, oddly, in his bestselling grilling book. (The sandwich isn't grilled.) With the opening of All Star Sandwich Bar, now every sandwich that haunts Schlesinger's memory has a place it truly belongs. As the tagline printed across the menu asserts, "A Good Sandwich Is Like an Old Friend."

Well... sure it is. Schlesinger's beloved crabwich is re-envisioned here as a fried-bluefish po' boy (more local than Virginia crab), and other old pals include a Texas reuben (smoked brisket, monterey jack and coleslaw on rye, $8.75) borrowed from East Coast Grill, and "The Gobbler" ($7.75), a nostalgia-addled study in Thanksgiving leftovers that includes house-roasted turkey, apple-sausage stuffing and orange-cranberry relish on buttery brioche.

"It's really a tribute to the classic sandwich," says Schlesinger, who did his homework (with business partner Jimmy Economides) to make sure that every sandwich smacks of authenticity. For "Beef on Weck" ($8.75)—a sizable portion of thinly sliced house-roasted beef with au jus and horseradish piled on a kimmelweck bun (think salty Kaiser roll)—Economides made the trek to Buffalo, N.Y., for a sampling of the original. Where consensus proves impossible, however, the menu demurs: For instance, tuna salad—a notoriously sensitive issue for aficionados—is made exclusively to order, with customers orchestrating the inclusion (or exile) of onions, celery, capers, relish, mayo, curry and raisins ($7.50 a sandwich).

If the "Lunchbox Style PB&J" (choose creamy peanut butter or crunchy, $2.75) and burgers made from fresh-ground chuck ($8–$11; the grill gets going after 3 pm) don't elicit appropriate waves of nostalgia, grab a barstool, order one of five draught beers and tap into your powers of description to nominate your own favorite combos for a starring turn as "Guest Sandwich of the Day." Because no matter what the sandwiches hold, they're all stars here. 1245 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-868-3065). —JH

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Beau-T-ful... Finding a pristine seat on the T—untainted with graffiti, gum, coffee stains and who knows what else—is rare indeed. So when we got word of the MBTA's planned makeover of its train cars, we were immediately onboard. The system-wide upgrade, which began with the Orange Line and is heading soon to a Red Line train near you, includes vandalism-proof seat covers (woven from a tear-resistant material) and full-system subway maps in every car. And for the first time in more than 20 years, the hanging straps are back, offering a lifeline to the vertically challenged. But the ultra-loud patterned fabric that covers the seats leaves us scratching our head. An MBTA spokesman explains that the chaotic swirls of red, orange, green and blue are designed to camouflage graffiti. The graffiti might be prettier.

Urban Elegance... Home-furnishings boutiques are cropping up almost as fast as restaurants in the South End; one of the newest additions is Hudson, on Shawmut Ave. Formerly a real estate office, the 950-square-foot space showcases furnishings fit for an urban home—clean lines, modern designs and quality fabrics and materials. Owner/designer Jill Goldberg says her philosophy for the store reflects her ideas about interior design: inviting and personal, casual yet elegant. Soothing colors, wide-plank wood floors and one-of-a kind home accessories fill the space with lines such as Bungalow 5, Festoni and By Hudson (crafted by Goldberg herself), to name just a few. 312 Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-292-0900). www.hudsonboston.com.

Glass Menagerie... First there was the South Asian art boutique Kakadu. Then came the raku-pottery shop Jaboola. In their third effort to bring the work of unknown artists to the chic environs of Newbury Street, the group that owns them both has opened Lalo Treasures, a new jewelry and home-décor store selling the work of Israeli designer Orna Lalo. Lalo's work is made of Lucite in a variety of colors and textures, along with softer materials such as ribbons, wire and fabric. Signature items include doorknobs, candlesticks and sun catchers, as well as earrings, necklaces and bracelets, and prices range from $6 to $150. Each piece changes subtly in the s light, making no two exactly alike. 255 N bury St., Boston (617-437-6666).

A chic new space has a doorman posted at the Newbury Street entrance to greet customers and hail taxis when they descend, arms laden with designer deals, and...

Oh, but back to the shopping: From the entrance, an escalator rises to the second floor, where you'll find women's clothing, accessories, jewelry and shoes, f kids' clothing and home furnishings. Ruff Going

No matter what weather the new season brings, Fido still has to get walked. For a change of scenery, high-tail it to one of Greater Boston's dog parks.

Boston Common
Charles St. & Boylston St., Boston
Although there's no fenced-in area, Boston Common is the undisputed spot for meeting fellow dog owners (not to mention the mutts they have in tow). During off-leash hours—from 6:30 to 8:30 am, and 5 to 7 pm—dogs can run loose to their heart's content, provided they obey voice commands.

Brookline Avenue Playground
575 Brookline Ave., Brookline
Set amid green fields near the Riverway, this four-acre fenced-in area gives your canine a haven to run free. The park does a brisk business, however, so make sure your four-legged friend is in a playful (not a spiteful) mood before allowing free rein.

Charlesgate Dog Run
Mass. Ave. & Beacon St., Boston
Situated along the Esplanade at the edge of the Back Bay, this dog run is smaller than most, but completely fenced in.

Danehy Park
99 Sherman St., Cambridge
This 50-acre expanse has an unfenced leash-free zone. Dogs may roam free as long as they obey voice commands.

Dog Day Afternoons
1011 Harrison Ave., Roxbury
This members-only dog park boasts a 40,000-square-foot private park outside and a 5,500-square-foot indoor facility with mats and mirrors everywhere. Prance, pup, prance.

Fresh Pond Reservation
250 Fresh Pond Pkwy., Cambridge
Allowed off leash, dogs can run and play as long as they are obedient and are cleaned up after.

Peters Park
East Berkeley St. & Washington St., Boston
This eight-year-old park comprises a 16,500 square-foot parcel of land facing Washington Street in the South End. Neighborhood dogs and their guardians roam freely.

TASTY TIDBITS

French Evolution

Mangez-Vous à Bouchée Avec Moi?... After months of speculation, Back Bay Restaurant Group (the folks who brought us Abe & Louie's and Papa Razzi) has finally unveiled its latest creation. Bouchée, a classic French brasserie, is set to open in late September at 159 Newbury St., the old Du Barry location. The bistro-like setting will include large mirrors, mahogany paneling, black leather chairs and mosaic tiling, and the kitchen will be headed up by chef Tim Partridge—formerly of Perdix and Ten Tables—who's planning classic French fare like steak frites, coq au vin and cassoulet.

Get Your ZZZs... David Zebny, Chelmsford native and Harvard grad, got his culinary start in California but always dreamed of life back in the Hub. In 2005, when Finagle a Bagel ditched its former Harvard Square location, Zebny jumped at the chance to turn his dreams into reality: In late September, he'll open Z Square at 14 JFK St. Based on the same concept as Café Z, his Marin County, Calif., spot, the new restaurant will feature a 130-seat main dining room, a 25-seat café, a 25-seat outdoor patio and a full-service bar. The menu, courtesy of executive chef Paul Sussman—formerly of Daddy-O's in Cambridge—will include a selection of dishes inspired by the chef's South

CHRIS COOPER

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPHS BY KERRY BRETT HURLEY

One of the most respected actors alive, Oscar winner Chris Cooper was born in Kansas City, Mo., and grew up on a ranch. He studied at the University of Missouri's department of theater and began his professional career on the stage in New York, where his credits included Of the Fields Lately, The Ballad of Soapy Smith and A Different Moon. He made his film debut in John Sayles' Matewan. In 1997, Cooper received a Best Actor nomination from the Independent Spirit Awards for his work in Lone Star, and in 1999, he starred in October Sky. His other film credits include The Horse Whisperer, Great Expectations, A Time to Kill, This Boy's Life and City of Hope, although it was his portrayal of a stern Marine father to a teenaged boy in American Beauty in 1999 that brought him wider attention. That role earned him a Screen Actor's Guild Award, and roles in Me, Myself & Irene, The Bourne Identity and The Bourne Supremacy followed. In 2003, he was nominated for another Screen Actor's Guild Award for his role in Seabiscuit and an Emmy for his performance in the HBO film My House in Umbria opposite Maggie Smith. The same year brought him an Oscar for his role in Adaptation, and starring roles have followed in such widely admired films as Capote, Jarhead and Syriana. Earlier this year, he wrapped production on Breach, in which he plays the title role opposite Ryan Phillippe, and he's currently working on two new projects. Alongside Jamie Foxx, Jennifer Garner and Jason Bateman, Cooper stars in The Kingdom, about a team of U.S. government agents who investigate the bombing of an American facility in the Middle East, and he also appears in Marriage, a drama set in the 1940s costarring Pierce Brosnan, Patricia Clarkson and Rachel McAdams. On the small screen, his credits include Lonesome Dove, Return to Lonesome Dove, Breast Men and Law & Order. He lives with his wife, Sopranos star Marianne Leone, in Kingston.

Jonathan Soroff: Do you feel like a b

Chris Cooper: No, because I'r around L.A. You don't know how th ness feels about you, living in Bos think that's one of the things that k interesting for me. L.A. is such an ir town. It's all anyone talks about—th ness—and being away from it giv enough distance that I stay excited the work.

JS: Do you form friendships on the set, they just colleagues—like, do you pal a with Meryl Streep?

CC: Meryl has become a friend, a stay in touch and see each other on sion, but usually, it's a gypsy's life. Th hips [on set] are very tight because it's tense period of working together, but you move onto the next project and own life.

idn't you spend last Thanksgiving with Witherspoon and Ryan Phillippe?

Yeah. They brought their kids and we great time with them. They're a great le, and they're amazing to put up with they do in L.A. I think they're con- ng moving to Connecticut. The non- you have to put up with in L.A. is y hard to take.

o is Ryan Phillippe the prettiest man alive?

He's pretty luscious. I'm very impressed him. For a kid that age—Tobey Maguire, too—to be so famous and so young and still keep it together is amazing.

JS: What do you consider your big break?

CC: As far as film work, it was John Sayles' hiring me for Lone Star. After that, things started opening up real well. He and his wife are good friends of Marianne and mine. We were at their place in upstate New York, preparing dinner, when John told me about this script he was developing, and he concluded by saying, "And you're playing the sheriff."

JS: You've played a lot of FBI/law enforcement and military types. If you were in charge, how would you handle the situation in the Middle East?

CC: Oh, man. Just the question I wanted to answer during my lunch break. I've kept my distance in the last few months, but are you talking specifically about Iraq? I wish the political left would step up and assert itself. I'm getting pretty irritated with them, and as for the situation itself, I wish they'd build up the Iraqi forces as rapidly as they can and start sending our guys home. We gotta move along on this.

JS: You grew up on a cattle ranch in Missouri. How do you get from there to being one of Hollywood's most respected actors?

CC: It was either one or the other. Before I got into ranching, I loved theater and film, and I loved the idea of toying with characters; I certainly played the role of cowboy to the hilt when I was out working with the cattle…

JS: Pushin' cows?

CC: Yeah, absolutely. Birthing, castrating, tattooing, vaccinating them, everything. So it was either give this acting thing a try—which I had to do or I'd be pretty bitter with myself—or it was going to be ranching. And thank god, now that I'm in my 50s and know how physical ranching is, I know I made the right choice.

JS: Do you still have the farming bug?

CC: No. We live on the South Shore, so not aside from little home improvement projects—this summer, I redid my deck—or carpentry, which was sort of my survival job in New York. Before that, I built homes with my brother, and in the early '70s, I worked on the Kansas City Chiefs' and Royals' football and baseball stadiums. It was a great survival job when the acting roles weren't happening.

JS: What do your neighbors think of you now?

CC: You mean that I live in Massachusetts? I'm surprised, because there are so many people in this business who are from or live in Massachusetts. I'm constantly amazed by it.

JS: Your best line in a movie, I think, was in Me, Myself & Irene when you said, "He's nuttier than a squirrel turd." You think that applies to you?

CC: No. I'll daresay I think I'm pretty sane. I have my moments with my wife, and she's pretty much the only one I show my crazier side.

JS: So you're a movie star who lives in a small town on the South Shore of Massachusetts. Tell me that's not weird.

CC: I think initially the neighbors were perhaps a little leery that an actor was moving into their neighborhood, but they very quickly warmed up. Our next-door neighbors, in particular, are real good friends. They've got three kids, and they used to hang out with my son when he was alive. There are a lot of great memories from before he passed on, and they've been very helpful and understanding ever since. They're great friends.

JS: You've lived through the worst thing that can happen to anyone: the death of your son. Has that affected your acting?

CC: I think he improved my acting throughout his life, and his death has fed certain emotions. That may sound rude to a reader, but this is what actors do. We draw from our emotions and from life experience, and we bring that to our characters if we can.

JS: You, more than a lot of other actors, really inhabit a role. Do you bring any of that stuff home?

CC: Yes and no. I like to get my scripts as early as possible, and so home is a place where I prepare and do my homework. Like in Adaptation, I had that set of teeth sent to me from the studio about a month before I started shooting, and I really needed that time to learn how to speak with them in. So there would be days when Marianne and I would be watching a movie and I'd have that set of teeth in just to get used to it. But as far as bringing the work home? Not at all. I drop it as soon as the day is done. Carrying it on your shoulders doesn't work for me at all.

JS: Favorite part of living in Massachusetts?

CC: The water. Growing up in Missouri, we were landlocked and I never realized what a great addition to a person's life being close to the water is.

JS: Favorite movie of all time?

CC: Most recently, a movie that's stayed with me is a Wim Wenders film called Paris, Texas, but there are so many.

JS: Last movie you saw in a theater?

CC: I went to see Meryl in The Devil Wears Prada, and of course, she's brilliant.

JS: Most talented actor you've ever worked with?

CC: I guess Bob De Niro is certainly one of the standouts, and Robert Duvall is one of the great talents. Tommy Lee [Jones]. I'm so lucky to have worked with a lot of these people, and, of course, Meryl was a huge help to me as far as driving home the idea of enjoying the whole process. She just said, "You could enjoy this a bit more," and I've kind of taken that to heart.

JS: Most fun you ever had on a set?

CC: Adaptation, working with Meryl. It was just consistent every day, laughing our heads off. We were working in the old Tarzan lagoon on the Warner Bros. lot. And it turned foul after four or five days, so it was like we were walking through a sewer, and some of the stuff we had to put up with was pretty hilarious.

JS: Is there one actor you'd kill to work with?

CC: Oh, god. Let's see. I have the greatest respect for Harvey Keitel, and Anthony Hopkins is just really delicious to watch. And there are a lot of women talents out there.

JS: Is there one actor or director you'd never want to work with again?

"IT WAS EITHER GIVE THIS ACTING THING A TRY, WHICH I HAD TO DO OR I'D BE PRETTY BITTER WITH MYSELF, OR IT WAS GOING TO BE RANCHING.... I KNOW I MADE THE RIGHT CHOICE."

CC: Yeah, but I'd never mention the name. The one person I'm thinking of was inept and in way over their head, in a production that they had no business directing and that actually had to be taken out of their hands and saved.

JS: Every time you watch The Sopranos, do you worry what's going to happen to your wife?

CC: Yeah. Both of us do, because god knows what they'll ask her to do. She originally auditioned for the part of Tony's sister, and after watching what the character went through with her husband, Marianne said, "Thank god I didn't get that role." She could never face anybody in Kingston after the rear-entry sex scene.

JS: Favorite thing to do between projects?

CC: Just be with my wife. I'm a very lucky guy. We've been through a lot, and we're best friends, and when we're not working, we're just in each other's faces 24/7. That's the way it's been for 23 years, and I can't believe how wonderful it's been.

JS: What does your Academy Award mean to you?

CC: I just think it means I've made some good choices along the way. It's been a really slow climb for me, and like a lot of good actors, I didn't do a film till I was 35. I did 15 years in theater before that, and that's what developed my craft and a technique of acting I could depend on.

JS: How do you prepare for a role?

CC: Every job requires something different. That's what makes this business so interesting. You're never going to do a repeat performance, although there are actors who, with their fame, it's kinda required that they turn out the same kinda thing. But I've made an effort to play a wide range of characters and ages, and taking some of those leaps can be scary, but that's where you want to go as an actor.

JS: Is attending the Oscars any fun?

CC: Yeah, it was for me. It was terrific because I didn't take any suggestions from anybody on what to do. The day before, I was a presenter at the Independent Spirit Awards. We were staying at Chateau Marmont, and I hired massage therapists for me and Marianne and we had music and candlelight, and then the morning of the Oscars we had breakfast with a couple of close friends. Then it was time to get dressed and go. We did a lot of partying afterwards, though everybody in the business was saying, "You gotta make an appearance here, and go to this party," and we h just doing our own thing.

JS: Least favorite thing about Hollywoo

CC: Probably interviews and publi films. You go on a week or 10-day doing interviews. I guess another t don't like is what they call [electronic kits] for films. It's usually so early in th duction, but the film company wants terview you about what it's like worki the film, and it's like, "I haven't w with half the actors. How can I talk this?" That's kinda irritating.

JS: So how do you stay out of the tabloi

CC: Well, I don't know. For one th don't think they're too interested i I'm just a middle-aged guy. I don't l L.A. And I don't qualify for that ki interest. I stay under the radar. It's ic couldn't wish for a better situatior able to do leading roles or good supp roles, and nobody bugs me.

JS: And you get to live like a normal per

CC: Absolutely. Our closest friend teachers, and a couple of folks who w Plimoth Plantation as craftsmen, and ple like that.

JS: Last question: One role you'd kill fo

CC: If the script were right, I thi would be wonderful to do something, portion—since you couldn't cove whole life in a feature film—about Lloyd Wright. He'd be a terrific char I've always been crazy about his work he had a very interesting and long l role centering on the period when h creating Fallingwater would be real esting. The guy was two centuries ahe his time. iB merica Online recently made a boo-boo and publicly posted internal documents that catalog the ases its users typed into its search engine. hile AOL quickly took down the data and logized, the media jumped on the story, h the Washington Post calling it "the first espread public glimpse of how people ch the Internet, of what they are inter- d in." Well, I read plenty of these stories, they were pretty vague about what peo- searched for. Free stuff and sex were two ies, but what kind of free stuff and sex? I t details. Lucky for you, I happen to run eb site myself (pat yourself on the back if can guess its address), and I can access search terms people use to arrive there. l unlike AOL, I'm not afraid to expose gritty underbelly of the online world.

SEARCH ME

AOL is afraid to publish your search queries. I'm not.

fter perusing the past year's worth of words and phrases, I have a few conclu- s, both about the freaks who use com- ers and, to an equal extent, myself. For rance, if someone searches the phrase "ree control vibrating underpants"—as eone did—then I've got lots of ques- ids. Why do you need a remote? From how way does it work? Is it vulnerable to in- erence from garage door openers? Why l apparently a resource on this topic? I just how many people on this train are ring remote-control vibrating under- s right now? Because I'm a little jealous. ut battery-powered undergarments n't the only fashion-related searches I ed up (or, more accurately, turned me Other searches included "acid-wash ache jeans," "thongs with golf spikes," rtford Whalers clothing," "men's diggers," and "two-person cow costume to make." All these terms seem random l you consider one other search that oc- ed in the same time frame, one that ht explain the relationship between -wash Jordache jeans and thongs with spikes: "Beacon Hill Pub dress code."

ARE YOU THE ONE WHO SEARCHED "GETTING RID OF CANKLES?" MAYBE I CAN HELP.

esides its treasure trove of fashion infor- ion, my site also appears to have a self-help component. Are you the person who searched "getting rid of cankles"? Maybe I can be of assistance. Ditto for "hairy palms urban legend," "poison yourself with D-Con," and, especially, "getting rid of smegma." But Ez, you don't have any smegma.... Exactly!

As for the person who searched "attached to my nipples," I'm afraid I'm going to need more information. What, exactly, is attached to your nipples? Alligator clips? Alligators? Colin Farrell? If you've already sorted this out, at least tell me how it went. And while I respect the online privacy of others, I don't think it's any mystery who searched "hypnotize someone to make them want to get fat." Obviously, you found the answer to your question, Mr. Federline.

And what would the Internet be without some puerile interests? I'm sorry to disappoint whoever looked for "pictures of butts," but I have neither that nor "beach midgets" nor "vagrants naked." Ditto with "hermaphrodite porn," "Bahamians having sex," and "hooters 'n' poopers." However, those searches gave me an idea for a new Web site that'll make tons of money. Now all I need is a hermaphrodite Bahamian hobo looking to make a few bucks the hard way.

Finally, there were those searches that are tough to categorize, but are interesting for the insight they offer into the human condition. "What happened to Whitesnake?" tells us that someone, somewhere, cares what happened to Whitesnake. Here's another that really made me scratch my head: "Bathtub with porthole." I don't know what that is, other than a great idea! Porthole-equipped bathtubs would add a new dimension of realism to my Poseidon Tub Time children's game. We're sinking! The water's already over the porthole! Timmy, save yourself! Timmy?

Also in the random file, I don't know why someone was looking for "traumatic haircuts," but I suspect that's the title of a new reality show on Fox. Also, the search for info on the "beef between Ice Cube and NWA" really opened my eyes to a hip-hop clash I hadn't heard about. I mean, even white guys like me know what happened with Biggie and Tupac, but I had no idea that Ice Cube had a problem with Northwest Airlines. Is his song "Ghetto Bird" about a Northwest plane? Because I always thought it was about pigeons. Hold on a sec while I Google that. IB

Calling All Controversies

With the Sox all but finished, where will WEEI turn for material?

So... that all ended pretty abruptly, huh? After an off-season of unrest, we sat in amazement this spring, as rly every guy on the Red Sox roster—n the exception of a two-headed profes-al disaster we'll call, um, Judy Tavanez—surpassed any and all expectations. As ng turned into summer, we remained tive, but slowly became skeptical as the kees continued to improve and the Sox sted a five-man rotation that featured minent roles for Jason Johnson and e Snyder.

Then it happened: Five games in four s = End of Season.

Yup, times are tough in the Hub, but n all the reasons for Bostonians to freak and indulge in a nice, tall glass of ven's Gate punch, I have one concern rises above all: What the hell are they ng to talk about on WEEI? Seriously, if can't spend our afternoons listening to s scream at each other about whether or the Bronson Arroyo/Wily Mo Peña e was worth it (three months after any-cares, incidentally), why Josh Beckett s throwing his fastball or why they're onsciously jealous of Seth Mnookin, t's the point of living? Should we all just the stereos out of our cars and drive in ce until pitchers and catchers report?

LL IT'S GOING TO AKE IS ONE BIG MISS ROM ROOKIE TEPHEN OSTKOWSKI EFORE ALL HELL REAKS LOOSE

ah, I'm guessing they'll find a few r things to harp on in the interim, and taking a look into the cracked Magic ll I found under some boxes in my of-here are my predictions for WEEI's roversies du fall:

orey Dillon vs. Laurence Maroney: know it's coming. There's no way ey goes the entire year without missing me to injury. But unlike last season, n the Pats had barely passable fallback ons like Heath Evans (what, Marion s wasn't available?), this year's Dillon g-ups will open the door for Maroney, a fire future star with the speed of a ntain lion and the elusiveness of Whitey Bulger. He's the kind of runner the Pats fans haven't seen since the days of... well, no one. (Antowain Smith, Terry Allen, Leonard Russell and Jon Stephens don't really cut it.) And if you don't think the team's excited about the Maroney Years, just take a look at the new Pats billboard off the Mass. Pike in Brighton. By Monday, Oct. 9—the start of the ever-boring bye week—the radio campaign to run Dillon out of town will be in full swing.

Gostkowski-gate: How much air time can one station devote to analyzing the kicking game? I think we'll find out, because all it's going to take is one big miss from rookie Stephen Gostkowski before all hell breaks loose and WEEI installs a defibrillator and an IV drip into its Brighton studios. It's not that I don't have faith in the rookie, but let's be realistic: He's going to miss an important kick or two. I say the first comes Oct. 1 at Cincinnati—the first big road game of the year—followed by a week of Big O and friends scrutinizing the front office for not breaking the bank for Vinatieri.

Fire Doc: Whether or not the Celtics will be any better than they were last year is still up for debate, but one thing is for sure: Even if they're better, they still won't be great. They're too young, too small, and most of their competition in the East has improved significantly. The wheels were set in motion with all the anti-Doc sentiment at the end of last season, and this year shouldn't do much to quiet his critics. If the C's don't win, Doc will take the blame, and you know which station will lead the charge toward his firing. (Hint: It's not Magic 106.7—I bet Dave Allen Boucher is more of a tennis guy.)

Jeremy Jacobs Is a Cheapskate: I can't claim to know much about hockey, but—aside from Dale Arnold—neither can anyone on WEEI. So when in doubt, you can be sure that the boys will turn to Old Reliable (and don't think Jacobs won't play his role, too). People are saying, "This is the year the Bruins turn it all around," but I'm saying, "I heard the same thing last year." Things will eventually go south and Jacobs and his tight wallet will take the hit.

The 8-Ball has spoken, so tune in if you like (or if you just can't catch the ESPN Radio signal), but don't say I didn't warn you. IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

So You Want to Be Published…

It takes one great idea (and a thick skin).

For years people at parties have said to me, "Boy, do I have stories to tell. I've always wanted to write a book."

"Great," I say. "Do it."

The answer's always a variation on the theme: "I just don't have the time."

Years ago, when I told a smart man that I didn't have time to write, he replied, "If you want something bad enough, you'll do it no matter what else you're engaged in." And advice, "if you want something bad enough." After I'd written a first novel, single spaced with no paragraphs, late at night, early in the morning and at lunch-time, drunk or sober, I sent the manuscript out to several literary agents. How did I get their names? Life is relationships. They can get you in the door for jobs, dreams and ambitions. Then it's up to you; only you can close the deal.

A New York agent took me on as a client. She was a Brit, quite famous for having been the novelist Graham Greene on her arm as well as the playwrights Christopher Isherwood and Jean Giraudoux. She was, as the French say, "formidable." Her name was Monica McCall. She was short and elegant and curious about everything. She rested her feet on a small footstool covered with an embroidered doily. She kept a small, worked-silver flask in a drawer in her desk. She would sip from the flask from time to time. My wife and I went to the London opening of one of her client's plays, The Lion in Winter. She sipped from her silver flask all through the first act. "Monica," I said, responsible for covering her face with a program as she took hits from the flask, "are you liking the play?"

"Dear boy," she said. "I have been reading the play for two years, hearing readings, attending rehearsals, being the middle. I'm here to show the colors. But it doesn't mean I have to be sober."

Monica taught me a lot about writing and publishing. I believed that, once you had a good agent, getting published was guaranteed. When my first novel was turned down by half a dozen publishers, with a typical comment being, "First-person novels seem easy to the beginner. There is only one J.D. Salinger."

"Screw them," I thought. But it was a lesson to me: the real world. Not everyone plays your act. It used to be true that if your manuscript was turned down, it was turned down by one editor. Totally arbitrary; one person. Today, a committee reviews your story: editorial, sales, promotion departments—death by a dozen opinions. Certain enterprises should be run as benevolent dictatorships: brokerage firms, country clubs, publishing houses.

Among the thoughts Monica planted in this writer's mind was the following:

"Forget about rejection letters. Treat them as a challenge and believe in yourself. Remember: A writer writes, he doesn't curl up in a fetal ball. But it will be easier for you to write a second novel than to rewrite the first. We'll come back to it someday. Go roll up your sleeves."

It was good advice. I wrote a second novel about the Army. Both manuscripts were sent to a new editor who bought them both and published the first one first. I've said before that getting published is all about "who loves ya, baby," and that there are at least a thousand kinds of love.

CERTAIN ENTERPRISES SHOULD BE RUN AS BENEVOLENT DICTATORSHIPS: BROKERAGE FIRMS, COUNTRY CLUBS, PUBLISHING HOUSES.

So how do you get the attention of a publisher or literary agent? I have a lawyer friend who wrote a novel and sent the manuscript out blind to a number of publishers. "They all came back rejected," he told me. "I was referred to one of them by a client. But I knew the son-of-a-bitch never read it."

"How could you tell?" I asked.

"Because I put a $100 bill between pages 78 and 79. And it came back to me. No one ever read it."

It can take years to write a novel. Or any book for that matter. Here's a shortcut for you prospective writers. If you know a lot about a particular subject and have a strong, unusual opinion about that subject currently, submit an op-ed piece to the Globe. I wrote one about Katharine Hepburn after she died. If someone publishes your quick take on an event, you can send that off to a variety of publishers with a note that says, "I have a book in the works, expanding on these thoughts. It might be of interest to you…." Short and cryptic. IB oston will have to adjust to new ways of seeing when the Institute of Contemporary Art opens its dra-tic, glass-walled new home on the waterfront near the akley Courthouse this fall (opening date still un-own as of press time). And it's hardly a coincidence t the first major exhibition in the cutting-edge Diller, fidio + Renfro structure is called Super Vision.

Anticipating the ICA

It really struck me that their architecture is very ch about... perceptual manipulations of views, of tlines, of spaces," ICA chief curator Nicholas Baume s. "And in fact, the whole new ICA building is al-st like this kind of giant optical device perched on harbor."

The 65,000-square-foot, $51 million building mises to become an icon for the city as well as the seum, with its skylit galleries, 325-seat theater and rmous cantilever jutting out over the harborwalk. ch of it is wreathed in glass, allowing a panoramic w of the harbor from the Founders' Gallery—and an tomist's view of the museum's innards from the cen-elevator.

The building to me seemed very much about moving from an everyday perceptual experience, where you haps don't think about how you look at things," me says, "into a kind of sensitized mode of experience, ning up your senses to look at things in surprising and resting ways."

Super Vision features works by 27 top contemporary sts, including Tony Oursler, Gerhard Richter, Yoko o, Jeff Koons and Ed Ruscha. The displayed paint-s, videos, photos and sculptures consider how new hnologies have changed what it means to see. Mona oum uses medical procedures like endoscopy to offer look inside her body, while Ricci Albenda's instal-ons, inserted into and extending from gallery walls, have anthropomorphic qualities, often evoking eyes, lips or bodily orifices.

"They're really not necessarily about the biology of seeing but the cultural and environmental context of vision," Baume says. "[The artists are] picking up on new technologies not because they're computer geeks, but because they want to capture and represent the way visuality is changing in contemporary society."

The most startling change for ICA fans will be the sheer space available for exhibits after the cramped former police station that was the museum's home at 955 Boylston St. Not only will major exhibit space vastly expand, but there'll be room for the permanent collection the ICA recently started when it acquired works by Laylah Ali, Kai Althoff, Nan Goldin and others.

"When you come to Boston as a tourist or a visitor and you think, 'Where should I go in Boston? What are the things to do?' they're really generally all in some way rooted in the past," Baume says. "There are very few places to go in Boston that are about today and the future. The new ICA will be a place to go and really experience being alive at the beginning of the 21st century."

The Wider Scene

They may be overshadowed by the ICA opening like a picnic lunch under that building's giant cantilever. But our town's other art museums are hardly giving up this fall.

Not surprisingly, one exhibition that'll be an appropriate companion to an ICA trip is at MIT's List Visual Arts Center: Sensorium: Embodied Experience, Technology and Contemporary Art, Part I. (Part II opens in February.) This may be the most playful exhibition in town this fall. One room puts visitors in video-equipped helmets that force them to see the world through the eyes of other people in the room. ("OK, dude, run straight at that wall....") Another uses a sort of scratch 'n' sniff technology to give pure white gallery walls the "scent of human fear."

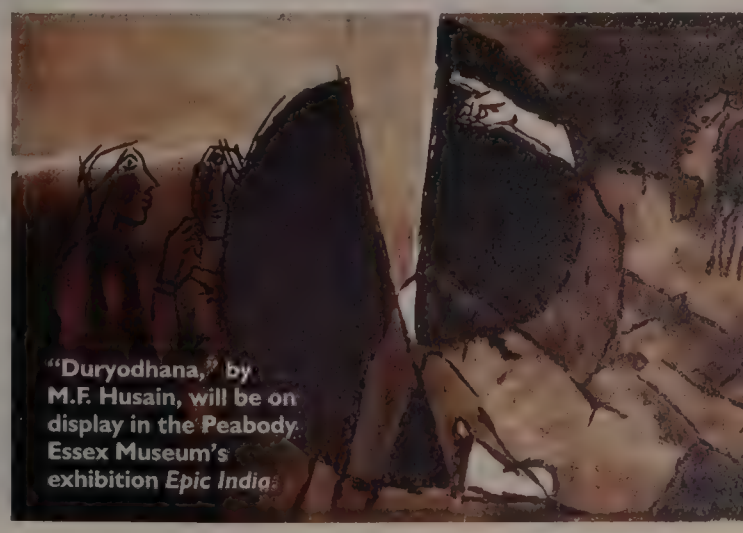
The subject is "the ways the technologies we use every day, from iPods to cell phones to chat rooms, are fundamentally changing the way we experience the five human senses," says curator Bill Arning. "A simple thing like the 'new car smell' that you get in a new car is no longer the smell of the parts, it's a chemically altered simulation of what new cars used to smell like—because people like that new car smell."

The MFA is once again courting "But is it art?" controversy with Fashion Show: Paris Collections 2006. The exhibition features collections by Azzedine Alaia, Hussein Chalayan, Chanel, Christian Dior, Christian Lacroix, Valentino, Viktor & Rolf and Yohji Yamamoto. About 10 outfits from each will be featured, in glam settings designed to evoke their runway debuts. "This is a chance for people to get a front-row seat for one of the runway shows in Paris, a chance for them to really see up close the garments that go down the runway, which I think is something most people never get to experience," says curator Pamela Parmal.

Starting in September, the MFA also offers a look at "the largest and most important collection of South Asian painting outside India." Domains of Wonder: Masterworks of Indian Painting, a national touring exhibition drawn from the Edwin Binney III Collection at the San Diego Museum of Art, features more than 100 paintings from five centuries' worth of Indian art.

Just up the road in Salem, another show about Indian art at the Peabody Essex Museum offers a rare look at the work of the great painter M.F. Husain, who even in his 90s continues to run afoul of authorities and religious conservatives. Epic India features 20 of his paintings inspired by and commenting on India's beloved ancient epic the Mahabharata.

The Harvard University Art Museums will explore both fine art and art as social commentary in its two major fall exhibitions. Rembrandt and the Aesthetics of Technique, at the Busch-Reisinger Museum, will offer more than 30 drawings and paintings by the master and his workshop. Dissent!, at the Fogg Art Museum, will feature 40 prints by the likes of Francisco Goya, Joseph Beuys, Jasper Johns and Richard Serra, addressing a variety of historical political topics ranging from 16th-century religious oppression to prisoner abuse at Abu Ghraib.



"Duryodhana," by M.F. Husain, will be on display in the Peabody Essex Museum's exhibition Epic India.

The Women will run for a m

here was a time when fall in Boston meant a chance to see the finishing touches applied to a w of new shows on their way to Broadway. Rodgers l Hammerstein renamed Oklahoma! during its run he Colonial Theatre. Stephen Sondheim wrote nd in the Clowns" at the Ritz, and such hits as baret, Company and Dreamgirls got their start at wntown houses. Well, those days have gone the y of disco and the pay phone; today shows are re likely to preview on the West Coast, where rtains, the new Kander and Ebb show (set back- ge at the Colonial in 1959—ah, sweet irony!), is rently testing the waters.

Backstage at the real Colonial, though, will be tling in coming weeks with a new musical headed Broadway: High Fidelity, based on the Nick rnby novel and its American film adaptation. The ry follows the romantic foibles of a record-store ner (played by John Cusack in the film) who knows rything about pop music but nothing about rela- nships. Whether the musical's creators will be able eplicate the novel's hip attitude remains to be seen, judging from a press preview of songs from the w, Will Chase is a talent to watch. Chicago's Walter bbie directs.

The musical's book, by the way, is by David Lindsay- aire, the South Boston native who recently made lash on Broadway with Rabbit Hole, his touch- drama about a young couple devastated by the of their child, which sees its Boston premiere at capable hands of the Huntington Theatre Com- y in November.

The fate of the long-vacant Wilbur Theatre has n in question since ClearChannel terminated its e at the end of July. Would it become a comedy ? A nightclub? Those scenarios have been shelved east for now) with the open-ended booking of The h Annual Putnam County Spelling Bee. This ky Broadway hit pits six teenage misfits in a war of ds that sounds like A Chorus Line for Mensa mem- , with songs by Natick native William Finn (of ettos fame).

lvis meets Shakespeare in All Shook Up, the ebox" musical that takes some of the Bard's most iliar plots and mixes them with the King's best gs. (Believe it or not, the Broadway run got decent ews.) Another current New York hit headed this is Altar Boyz, an award-winning musical that ofs the rise to stardom of a Christian boy band. l yes, one of them turns out to be gay.

What looks to be the most politically charged fall ring is the Lyric Stage's Nine Parts of Desire, ess/journalist Heather Raffo's inquiry into the s of Iraqi women, both pre- and post-war. A dif- nt kind of sociological insight can be found in the akEasy Stage's The Women, Clare Boothe Luce's nted (some may say vicious) examination of sex class among 1930s Park Avenue society types. owing on the heels of the hugely successful opause: The Musical comes another feminist gfest, Respect: A Musical Journey, featuring e 60 songs meant to empower women.

you're wondering where the onstage testosterone ook no further than the sequestered jurors of 12 ry Men, the courtroom thriller in which justice is to the test. Richard Thomas and George Wendt l up the national company of the recently Tony- inated production. And is there a meatier male than Hamlet? Actors' Shakespeare Project artis- director Benjamin Evett will find out just how y a skull is when he takes on the role in an inti- production at Dorchester's vast Strand Theatre.

Richard Thomas and George Wendt co-star in the touring production of 12 Angry Men.

The American Repertory Theatre's reputation for edginess will likely be enhanced by Wings of Desire, a stage adaptation of filmmaker Wim Wenders' poetic drama about an angel who falls in love with a mortal; and by the appearance of the local rock/cabaret duo the Dresden Dolls in The Onion Cellar, which was written by the band.

Speaking of edgy, the cross-dressing Gold Dust Orphans return with The Plexiglas Menagerie, (very) loosely based on Tennessee Williams' famous autobiographical play; and Silent Night of the Lambs, with Hannibal Lecter under the mistletoe. And Theater Offensive's Out on the Edge Festival celebrates its 15th year with Queer Theory, a new musical satirizing gay academia, and performance pieces by Paul Zaloom, Marga Gomez and choreographer David Parker.

Vying for fall's cheekiest show title are the Speak-Easy Stage's The Bubbly Black Girl Sheds Her Chameleon Skin, a coming-of-age story about an African-American woman with stars in her eyes; and Boston Theatre Works' A Very Merry Unauthorized Children's Scientology Pageant, the off-Broadway cult hit that explains the religion through a children's Nativity play (without any assistance from Tom Cruise).

As for dance, both classical and modern traditions are represented this fall on Boston stages. Does ballet get any more traditional than the Kirov Ballet of the Mariinsky Theatre of St. Petersburg? Their name alone suggests Old World stature. The venerable company returns to Boston after a three-year absence with its esteemed production of Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake. You'll find no Matthew Bourne–style modern interpretation here; this is Swan Lake as it was performed more than a century ago, using Marius Petipa's and Lev Ivanov's original choreography. There's also a Kirov connection in Boston Ballet's Don Quixote: Rudolph Nureyev's choreography is based on a production he danced with Kirov before he defected to the West.

On the contemporary front, choreographer Ronald K. Brown brings his company Evidence to the new waterfront home of the Institute of Contemporary Art. Hailed by the New York Times as one of the most profound choreographers of his generation, Brown uses an eclectic mix of dance styles (African, modern, ballet and hip-hop) in his invigorating pieces, which include two Boston premieres.

The holiday season means a return of Boston Ballet's annual favorite The Nutcracker, happily reconfigured for the Opera House, as well as numerous productions of A Christmas Carol—including the return of an acclaimed Victorian version at the New Rep in Watertown. And for something a little different, there's the stage version of Bob Clark's film classic A Christmas Story at the Stoneham Theatre. You know, the one with Ralphie and the BB gun.

James Levine and the BSO return with another season of masterpieces, both classic and contemporary.

BY KEITH POWERS

Without a doubt, the greatest thing to happen to Boston in the last couple of years is… the Red Sox' World Series win in 2004? Sorry, but not for this listener. Rather, it's the resurgence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with new music director James Levine—who did have to overcome what's usually thought of as a baseball injury, a torn rotator cuff, this season—braving a new world of music with the venerable orchestra. For the third season in a row, more than half the music the BSO performs will have been written after 1900. No other major orchestra in the world can say that.

Opening night at the BSO features the legendary flutist James Galway and incomparable soprano Renée Fleming. Soloists this season include pianists Daniel Barenboim, Peter Serkin and Pierre-Laurent Aimard, and violinists Christian Tetzlaff and Anne-Sophie Mutter. Major programs include Schoenberg's Moses und Aron, Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle, Beethoven's Fidelio, and world premieres of works by Charles Wuorinen, Kaija Saariaho and Gunther Schuller.

Speaking of the new, does anyone do "new" better than the Boston Modern Orchestra Project? Doubtful. This year, BMOP introduces composer-in-residence Lisa Bielawa, who begins a three-year relationship that kicks off with a performance of two of her works, "Roam" and "unfinish'd, sent," with Bielawa herself as soprano soloist. The next two seasons will feature two more world premieres, a double concerto for two violins in 2007-08 and a concerto for orchestra in 2008-09.

All the works will eventually be recorded as well, and will be premiered as brief snippets during BMOP's popular Club Concert series at the Moonshine Room at Club Café on Columbus Ave. (Now doesn't that sound like a great place to hear classical music?) The first Club Concert is Dec. 5. "Lisa's a real advocate for music," says BMOP artistic director Gil Rose. "She's a dream as a composer-in-residence, because she's passionate, and she has a point of view that's all her own."

The Handel and Haydn Society, the nation's oldest continuously operating arts organization (it was founded in 1815), introduces a new artistic advisor this season, the esteemed and eccentric Sir Roger Norrington. With principal conductor Grant Llewellyn and conductor laureate Christopher Hogwood still in the mix as well, H&H offers a dream team of baton wavers. The season opens with Monteverdi's Orfeo, directed by Chen Shi-Zheng and featuring a host of noted soloists and a troupe of Indonesian dancers, at the Shubert Theatre.

Not to be outdone, Boston's other world-class period ensemble, Martin Pearlman's Boston Baroque, opens its season with another terrific opera, Mozart's Don Giovanni, at Jordan Hall. Pearlman always brings a cerebral and energetic approach to opera, and he'll be aided by a cast that includes Nathan Berg in the title role and Mark Schnaible as his servant, Leporello.

The Terezin Chamber Music Foundation is a performing and educational group dedicated to promoting music created by composers who perished in the Holocaust. Each year the group hosts a fundraising concert to support this important work, and Foundation director Mark Ludwig—with the help of connections through his day job as a BSO violist—always manages to attract preem soloists to lend a hand. This season is no exceptio virtuosic pianist Peter Serkin comes to the Colon Hotel to help the cause.

The Celebrity Series always presents interesting certs, and one highlight this year will be a performan the NHK Symphony Orchestra, conducte Vladimir Ashkenazy and featuring the fascinating Fi pianist Hélène Grimaud. It's a chance to hear a young pianist conducted by a great older pianist—A nazy hasn't given up the keyboard himself but ha voted more of his stage time in the last few years to ducting. They team up for Brahms' Piano Concerto 1, and the orchestra offers two chestnuts, Elgar's En Variations and Debussy's La Mer.

Emmanuel Music and artistic director Craig S have a knack for making people sit for four hours i butt-destroying pews at Emmanuel Church, listeni opera and loving every second of it. This season it's the fun, as the group presents Handel's Ariosto trilog ginning with Orlando in October. (Ariodante and A follow in January and April, respectively.)

Boston Conservatory, tucked away in the Fens, qu presents some of the world's greatest pianists each yea ing its Piano Masters series. The concerts are free, bu if don't call ahead to reserve a seat for Anton Kuerti' formance in November, you probably won't get thr the doors at Seully Hall. This is the insider's event o season: Kuerti may not be as well known as Alfred Br or Maurizio Pollini, but ask any musician about him you'd better be ready for a lengthy and laudatory disco Mark it on your calendar, and call early. iB

KILLER HEART

BY WILLIAM OREM | ILLUSTRATION BY KIM ROSEN

m in this band. Wilde at Heart. It's this ble David Lynch/Oscar Wilde thing. ner you get it or you don't.
The name is mine; in the sense that I le it up. More than that: I dreamed it. I ioned it out of my creative conscious-s. I'm a bass player. I play the bass.

ass players are always the creative ones. re the ones who actually do the think-. They used to put these little catch-es on the backs of albums in the soi-nt '60s. Soi-disant means "so-called." I them that, the soi-disant '60s, because rybody talks about the '60s like they e actually the '60s, but they weren't; y were the '70s. "Communication akdown" is 1969. Look it up.
Anyway.
They used to put these little catch-lines the backs of albums. Next to Ritchie ckmore and Alvin Lee and Robin wer it would say, "A veteran of multi-groundbreaking rock/fusion projects, carves out a bold new space for sonic ression with his fretboard versatility." en next to the bassist it would say, "He s from Fresno."
mean, every now and then it might say the backbone of the band or some shit. it never comes out and says: He's the ative thinker. He puts the deep in pur-He's the only guy in the whole damned fit who actually knows about art.

ere's a question: Who was the greatest s player ever?
t's a test. If you're uncool, you say Ent-le. You can redeem yourself, maybe, by osing "The Real Me" over "My Genera-n." But if you try and back up your claim citing "My Generation" you suck, you w nothing about rock, you are very ch an A-sider, my friend. I sit down on dressing room floor and start to cry.
What the hell's the matter, the drum-r says. Actually he's a second drummer; does this percussion thing with weird-king African instruments that still e animal hair on them while standing t to the first drummer. She met him in o in New Haven. He's a good guy. He rts so much coke that he's going to die.
What the hell, he says, rubbing his e-bone up and down like Dan Aykroyd he old days. Is it her again?

The floor where I'm sitting is sticky and it smells like fake popcorn spray. Up front I can hear the crowd starting to chant her name.

Fuck her, he says. Fuck her. Fuck her fuck her fuck her. Then he starts saying it really loudly into the mirrors and then he runs onstage shouting fuckerfuckerfucker! I actually think it's Ecstasy this time.

She's 16. It only says she's 18 on the records to keep things easy with the law. She's 16. She has more talent than 10 or 11 bands I've worked with. When she goes out on stage they scream at her. It's like they can't believe their brains, it's like every inch of them is just overloading with impossible fantasies. Like every fiber of their bodies is saying this moment right now is better than Jesus. I'm standing here, they're saying, and she's right over there—not on a CD liner, not on some kiddie-porn VH1 special, but right there, behind that fat-ass bassist. You can almost hear their souls.

Her fingers are so small she puts two of them inside the slide and just uses her pinky for seventh chords. When she walks between microphones she lets the Telecaster hang down like she doesn't even care if it lives or dies. Guys in the front row know how that guitar feels. They hope their girlfriends aren't watching them sidelong as she goes past. At that moment they would give anything. Absolutely anything.

You're an emotional cripple, Cory, she says to me in the hotel room. You're, like, an emotional cripple.

I'm trying to educate you on your chosen discipline, I say, but she puts her middle finger up her nose and walks out. Am I pissed? Sure I am. Keith Moon broke his wife's nose three times. Rock stars have history with their girlfriends' noses.

I go for some Cheetos from the hallway vending machine and when I get back she's gone. Really gone, like Elvis-has-left-the-building gone. I look around, sure it's going to be the guitar guy again. But it isn't the guitar guy this time. He's spread out on the couch watching pay-per-view and trying to play it tough, like he doesn't care where she went either, but I can see it in his face. That night he drinks a lot and throws up but he doesn't look like he means it. A couple days later she comes back.

You're a cripple, emotionally, she says, as if our conversation has just had a three-day hiatus. Hiatus means "long wait." There's her toy-boy waiting for her in the hallway, all dippy-doo hair and earrings up around the part of the ear that's hard to pierce. He isn't just the cat who ate the mouse, he ate the entire fucking cat. Like laying her gives him a right to look at us as if we're equals. Like it makes him rock.

The '70s were about integrity of expression. What did the best Yes albums have in common? Roger Dean covers. Why does Tormato suck so bad? No Roger Dean cover. You have to think in terms of total expression.

Bulls' balls, she says. She says that kind of thing; you'd be surprised. I have to rewrite the lyrics for her a lot.

Who played bass for Peter Gabriel?

That guy, she says. African guy.

You're thinking of Paul Simon, I say, spitting a piece of tobacco off my tongue. That's what you know.

Bulls' balls.

You don't know. You love "Sledgehammer" and you don't know.

I do know. I just can't think of his name.

Who plays bass on the Doors' first album?

It's a frickin' trick question. They used the keyboard.

You sure?

Don't you call me an A-sider, Cory, she says. Just because you're a few decades older than I am.

She goes out on the balcony and looks at the desert. We're in Arizona, playing at a blues fest for white people who want to be black people. Later there's a chant thing for white people who want to be Indians. Out of the corner of my eye I see the guitar guy still looking at her like he's a puppy who lost his Kibbles 'n Bits, but she isn't looking back.

Nobody gets me, Cory, she says, when I come out behind her. Nobody gets my thing.

I know it, I say, after a minute.

She puts her little arm around my side. The feeling of her hand on my skin even that much is obscene.

I'm sorry about the groupie, she says.

I strike a posture.

I'm all alone out there, she says. You know I'm all alone.

Nobody has what you have on stage, I say to her. Not that I've seen. Not since the soi-disant '60s.

I'm not talking about that, she says, and her hand goes a little deeper. I'm all alone, always, everywhere I go.

There is this pause.

I'm sorry about the things I do sometimes, Cory, she says. You know it's just me. It's just how I am.

We look at the darkness until it gives us some stars. I think of John Lodge on the back of In Search of the Lost Chord, his head turned musingly skyward.

Some day we're going to die, I say.

Don't give me any rock 'n' roll bullshit, she says.

We play Graceland and it's a good show. The second drummer guy is dead and a friend of the first drummer sits in. I'm on top of my game and it feels great, it feels real, it feels like metal rockets coming through my fingers. The guitar guy remembers the break and we all get it together; at the encore she turns and gives us a smile and it's like springtime has leaned down and brushed your cheek.

Give it up for my band, she says, and they roar. They don't care. She could tell them to drop to the ground and talk out of their asses, they'd do it. Hell, I'd do it too. She is like Circe, she can transform us. That night we make love and it's like the first times again. Afterward she falls asleep and I'm so happy I do a bong with nothing in it, just to hear the bubbling.

I have a nightmare that I'm having sex with Debbie Harry young again in her spandex thing, beautiful and dangerous the way she was in Videodrome, only when I'm about to climax I look in her face and she's Ziggy Stardust. It is the most horrible moment of my dreaming life.

I jump awake sure she's going to be gone but she's still next to me in the motel bed. The guitar guy has his foot on the mattress like he wants us to maybe consider a threesome but he's full of shit. In his dreams.

For a while it's good again.

Wilde at Heart is selling shows, the money is there and the music is real. We eat chips on an open-out sofa in Des Moines and she says she likes the name because she always liked "Barracuda." She says when she was 11 she wanted to be cool more than anything in the world but she couldn't remember that Heart did "Little Queen" and Queen did "Killer Queen" but nobody did "Killer Heart." It scared her so bad she thought she'd never fit in.

I tell her Wilde at Heart isn't about Heart, it's about Oscar Wilde, either they get it or they don't. I tell her "Barracuda" was just "Immigrant Song" on training wheels. I say if you ever understood all the words to "In the Evening" you would die. We argue over which is the coolest ending ever, "A Day in the Life" or "Who Are You."

Ka-bam, I say, hitting the cushions and making the springs shake. Who... who... who... are... ka-BAM! She tells me her dad used to slap her mother's forehead when he was pissed. He always said ka-bam just before he did it. I hate myself.

Later she tells me kind of offhand that the best thing Frank Zappa ever did was to get mentioned in "Smoke on the Water." We laugh. It's good again.

We make love repeatedly; we are happy and foolish. We are like two frolicking puppies in a meadow of love. We are all things free and unencumbered. She shows me the trick you can do with Altoids.

Name bands that sing about other bands, I say.

I asked Bobby Dylan, she sings. I asked the Beatles. I asked Timothy Leary, but he couldn't help me either.

I sung my song to mister Jimmy, I counter. And he said one word to me, and that was Dead.

Stoned me just like Jelly Roll.

I heard old Neil put 'er down.

Those Klan fucks, she says. They don't count.

We're lying naked in a hotel room in El Paso. I tell her my theory that all musicians who die in planes are crashing into one another in a higher dimension. It all happens at once.

Patsy Cline, I say, flew into Ritchie Valens.

I dig... the Mamas and the Papas, she sings. She is still playing the first game.

Randy Rhodes crashed into John Denver.

Coo-coo-kechoo, Mrs. Robinson, she sings. Jesus loves you more than you will know.

And everyone crashed into Skynyrd.

Those Klan fucks, she says. They don't count.

We make love tripping and for a second I think she's become a garage with an automatic door opener.

The shows are unbelievable, the guy who books us looks like he's going to bust out of his tie. She's open and receptive now and I try to teach her everything I know about rock. I tell her that's one of the Beach Boys on side four of The Wall. And that's Mick Jagger singing backup on "You're So Vain." And Stevie Ray Vaughan playing rhythm on "China Girl."

Why the hell would you put Stevie on rhythm? She asks. She's still pretty high but when she looks at me there's something in her eyes, something real and young and unbelievably fragile. The night before she has told me that without me she'd never laugh, and if she never laughed she'd stop singing forever. It's the single most moving thing anyone has ever said.

I step into the men's room five minutes before concert time and there's the guitar guy in the next stall. He's just sitting there on the toilet, kind of staring ahead of himself as if trying to think of a word. He's so burnt on inhalants he looks like a fish in a tank.

I say, You sellin' what you're smokin'? Just, you know, to break the ice. He comes staggering over with the baseball pants still down at his ankles and he hugs me and he tells me about the first time he knew he was destined to play lead. He says for everybody else it was "Eruption" but for him it was "Hats Off to (Roy) Harper." He's pawing my chest a little between words as if seeking a nipple.

Do you love her, man, he asks. Because if you love her, fuck.

I say I do, but he doesn't seem to process it.

Cause if you love her, fuck, he says. I'll get out of the way. If it's love.

It is, I say, but he still doesn't seem to have heard. In fact, he doesn't seem entirely clear on the whole "conversation" idea. He pulls up his pants and ties the little string.

Might as well jump! he shouts, leaping back and doing an air-guitar thing with his hands even though he has an actual guitar hanging upside-down on his back.

Then it's Tulsa. Tulsa sucks. The audience actually boos. The guitar guy gives them the devil sign and someone throws a cup of beer at him. You suck, they shout. You suck, Frampton. They always rag on him for the hair. I'm actually laughing a little bit inside but then she walks off stage right there, those superhigh boots making the only clapping sound in the place. We have to fill out the rest of the set with something so we play "Happy Jack." The audience boos.

I know what's coming. It's every bass player's bad dream. You can pretend you matter, you can talk about how the bassist is the deep thinker, the only one who understands art. But it's just talk. Nobody's asking Band of Gypsys if they're free to cover a bar mitzvah this weekend.

The guitar guy doesn't die but she gives him a broken cheekbone with a beer bottle she'd been learning to use like a slide. He's out of the band after that and we see him following us around for a while, showing up at gigs and drinking from the same thing she hit him with and standing in the back with all that hair like he's Roger Daltrey walking across the giant pinballs. He gets in a couple fights just so she'll notice him. Then he's gone.

She gets on the cover of Rolling Stone because it was booked six months earlier. She does it naked and then they digitize the image so you can't see. I think she has sex with the photographer.

I know what's coming. It's every bass player's bad dream: It follows us around. You can pretend you matter, you can talk about how the bassist is the deep thinker, the soul of the music and the only one who understands art. But it's just talk. Nobody's asking Band of Gypsys if they're free to cover a bar mitzvah this weekend.

You're fired, Cory, she says.

I scratch my crotch. I wish I hadn't done it; it's an awful thing to have been doing just then. But there it is, as Greg Lake said.

Am I? I say, trying to sound laid back.

Yeah, she says. Fuck yeah. You're out.

You think you're ready for that? I say. One is the loneliest number.

Jesus fuck, Cory, she says. Just get out. You're old and your music is old and everything you say is old. All the bands you talk about never even fucking existed. They didn't have rock back in the fucking, back in the bronze age. Nobody is going to boo me ever again. You make me sick.

I stand up, but my legs are shaking. The leather pants go creak-creak.

You talk and talk about old shit no one knows or gives a shit about, and your bass sounds old and your dick is old and everything about you is old. Goodbye.

Somehow that seems like an album title. Everything About You Is Old. I can't stop my mind from thinking it. Your Dick Is Old.

We've both been under a lot... I begin, and she hammers me with a piece of wood. It was just sitting there on the kitchen table in the Monterey Come-On Inn. She really swings it, too; it's like going for my brain. I run from the It's got no dignity, but it's the truth from her. She chases me onto the ba and down the stairs and over the balcony, which is only a foot abov ground but still, I'm falling, and she swinging hard with the wood again pointed-up legs, turning it around and get the nail end going toward give me tetanus.

Here's the answer: The greatest b ever was Jaco Pastorius, and yes h play rock. He did a cover of Hen cover of "The Star Spangled Banner know who Hendrix was and you who Francis Scott Key was but you know who Pastorius was or if yo know that you didn't know he did a of Hendrix' cover of "The Star Spa Banner." That's my point.

The bassist is always expendable bassist is always the quiet one.

I walk the streets a lot. It rains. She out a CD. The lyrics are bad. She use phrase "bull's balls" twice, once in th All the bull's balls you're handing me whatever, and then more obviously song title, "Bull's Balls." I look for r ences to me but there aren't any. changes the name of the band to H Heart and I refuse to go to any o shows. I look for a new act.

I played with Leon Redbone when I was a kid. Now I don't eve member if he was any good. I don't t so, but I can't be sure. I call his agent she puts me on hold.

After a while I go to her show. She's ing at another blues festival in Portl There's an announcer and Jonny La first. Next is Shannon someone and she's up. She comes out on stage and crowd just ignites; it's like the old day of them are surging for her, they beco mad wave made of hope and expecta Everyone hears in her voice and se her body the shape and outline of his personal ambition.

And this part stings: She looks re really happy.

At the intermission there's a tap o shoulder. It's the guitar guy. He do look so good. I ask him if he's been lowing her for an entire year now nods yeah.

He asks me if I want to start a band. I say no. Then he asks me if I to have sex with him. I say no a He's hurt.

After her, I say, trying to come up w reason. After her... what could compe

His face lights up. He nods like th profound, he's finally seen the wisdo me and the things I say. Like in this statement he has witnessed what he always been seeking. We bond. I have with him just for the hell of it. It's w In the morning he's dead. IB

NEW TO YOU

It's been said that to be a true Bostonian you need a house on Beacon Hill, a membership at the Harvard Club, a plot at Mt. Auburn Cemetery and an uncle at McLean. Perhaps to be a true American author, you need a book set in Boston, a membership at the Athenaeum, a plot worth reading and a release from McLean (see No. 10, below). Boston's appeal to the literati runs so deep that its draw is felt even posthumously: Nathaniel Hawthorne's exhumed remains recently relocated to the area—to some hot parcel of real estate in Concord. But Hawthorne was neither the first nor last to make his literary bones locally. You can barely walk down the street without tripping over a locale used in some dusty tome, epic poem or gay hairdressing murder mystery (see No. 18). Greater Boston is lousy with literary landmarks, setting the scene for authors, playwrights and plagiarists ever since the Mayflower dropped anchor. Here are just a few of the local spots that have been immortalized on the page.

1. Brook Farm, West Roxbury, was a utopian agrarian society and the setting for Hawthorne's Blithedale Romance (1852).

☆ 2. Our controversial countess Ellen Olenska absconds to the Parker House in Edith Wharton's The Age of Innocence (1920). Of course, this was prior to the opening of the Last Hurrah.

3. Similarities in Edwin O'Connor's The Last Hurrah (1956) between Frank Skeffington and Mayor James Michael Curley were purely coincidental, if you discount the Irish mayoral candidate vying for the corner office in Old City Hall thing.

☆ 4. In Erich Segal's Love Story (1970), Harvard Yard serves as the backdrop as Jenny tells Oliver, "Love means never having to say you're sorry." Do you think those were Larry Summers' parting words to the Harvard faculty?

5. According to Henry James' The Bostonians (1886), the cold, humorless Olive Chancellor "had the good fortune to dwell on that side of Charles Street" (the river side, between Chestnut and Beacon).

6. Having practiced at Mass. Eye and Ear, Robin Cook based Coma (1977) at the fictional Boston Memorial Hospital, which sounds an awful lot like MGH.

7. Michael Crichton's A Case of Need (1968) takes an unexpected turn when pathologist John Berry is assaulted in the Combat Zone, while looking for an illegal, back-alley clinic. (Crichton, busy boy, later directed the film version of Cook's Coma.)

8. In The Late George Apley (1937), J.P. Marquand's perfect snob fights the creation of Storrow Drive—long after his grandfather was scandalized by the sight of a neighbor in shirtsleeves and moved the family from the South End to the Back Bay.

9. All Souls (2000) author Michael Patrick MacDonald details his life in the Old Colony projects in Southie, but his first job was a half a world away at the Rat in Kenmore Square.

☆ 10. Sylvia Plath and Susanna Kaysen's stays at McLean Hospital in Belmont are reworked in The Bell Jar (1963) and Girl, Interrupted (1994). If you can't find it in the literature section, you may want to look in the semiautobiographical bin.

11. Fenway Park is where a coerced J.D. Salinger is taken in W.P. Kinsella's Shoeless Joe (1982). In a bit of typecasting, the author was played by James Earl Jones in Field of Dreams, the film adaptation of this story.

12. Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote of the majesty of Old Ironsides (1830) in the days when it was a battleship, rather than "that boat over by Tavern on the Water."

☆ 13. Malcolm Little misspent his youth in jazz clubs like Wally's on Mass. Ave. in the South End; you can read all about it in the Autobiography of Malcolm X (1965).

14. Make way for frat boys attempting to steal one of the adorable duckling statues in the Public Garden commemorating Jack, Kack, Lack, Mack, Nack, Ouack, Pack and Quack's crossing from the Robert McCloskey children's classic Make Way for Ducklings (1941).

☆ 15. A young girl's survival in the woods is tied to the Fenway Park pitcher's mound and former Red Sox closer Tom Gordon in Stephen King's The Girl Who Loved Tom Gordon (1999).

16. The Women's Room (1977), Marilyn French's '70s feminist breakthrough, spent weeks on the bestseller list while its heroine spent her evenings at Grendel's Den in Harvard Square.

17. Edgar Allen Poe rued the fact that he was a Bostonian born and bred, so he referred to his hometown satirically as Frogpondium (in a short piece of the same name) after the Common's Frog Pond, about which he quipped, "the duck pond might answer, if its answer could be heard for the frogs."

18. As soon as he finds a corpse in the "last unrenovated brownstone" on the South End's Tremont Street, Stan Kraychik, gay hairdresser–turned–amateur sleuth, is on the case in Grant Michaels' Dead as a Doornail (1998).

19. The Pine Street Inn may be one of the worst places to run into your dad while you're working; ask Nick Flynn as he welcomes you to Another Bullshit Night in Suck City (2004).

20. Angie Gennaro and Patrick Kenzie are from the same neighborhood (Dorchester) as Dennis Lehane, so they're perfectly cast as private eyes in A Drink Before the War (1994); Darkness, Take My Hand (1996); Sacred (1997); Gone, Baby, Gone (1998); and Prayers for Rain (1999).

21. Poet Louise Glück's homage to fromage "Formaggio" (1999) is inspired by and posted in Formaggio Kitchen in Cambridge.

☆ 22. The Ritz-Carlton is where the naïve Lee Fiora realizes the difference between having money and being rich in Curtis Sittenfeld's Prep (2005).

☆ 23. Famed naval historian Samuel Eliot Morison wrote One Boy's Boston (1962) about his childhood home on the corner of Mt. Vernon and Brimmer Streets. The only other thing you need to know about him is that a memorial statue on the Comm. Ave. mall depicts him with a Sox cap on.

24. George Plimpton joined the Bruins and, under the bright lights of the Boston Garden, carefully protected his five hole in Open Net (1985). Having died in 2003, he now seems a perfect candidate for Jeremy Jacobs' front office.

☆ 25. James Frey once lived in Boston, where he wrote A Million Little Pieces (2003) under a tall oak in the Public Garden surrounded by frolicking unicorns. No, he didn't.

26. In Johnny Tremain (1944), Esther Forbes practically walks her young hero along the Freedom Trail, making stops at the Old North Church and Paul Revere's House. —WL

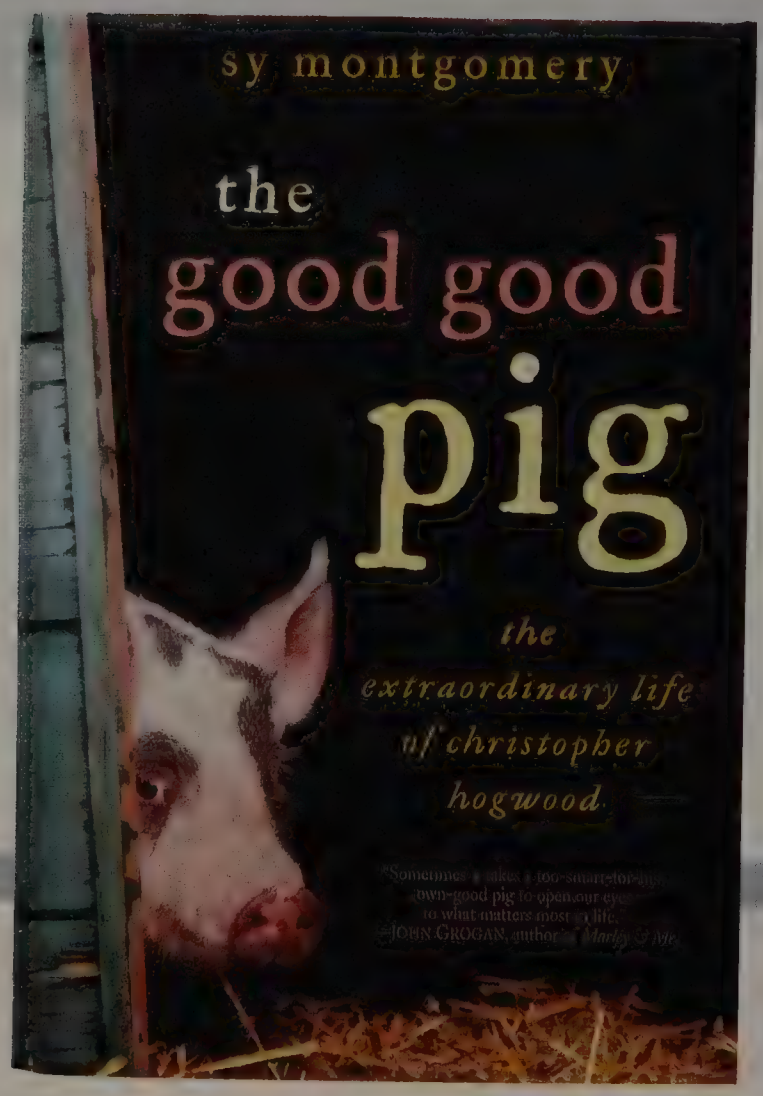
BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



AND YOU THINK YOU LOVE YOUR DOG

Sy Montgomery, a naturalist who writes about animals both wild and tame, has a new book, The Good Good Pig.

"I'm a vegetarian and my husband, Howard, is Jewish," writes Sy Montgomery in her book The Good Good Pig, asserting that her pet, Christopher Hogwood, will never go the route of bacon. With an adventuresome life studying tigers, apes and dolphins, often dangerously, in the wild, Montgomery takes on, at home, an adorable pet piglet. On buckets of slop that comes from restaurants and, increasingly, from his many friends, Chris achieves a stately rotundity of 750 lbs. One of his charms is the primal delight he takes in each sensual, gigantic meal. This adored pig becomes the emotional focus of Montgomery's family and friends, including a dying teenager and two neighbor girls stinging from their parents' divorce. Childless herself, Sy is an only child, whose parents disown her for marrying a Jew—though she dutifully helps both parents as they're dying. Nonetheless, she is generous, loving and remarkably un-bitter and shows with humor and affection how many rifts Piggy heals—he's Sy and Howard's virtual baby, and a regular community organizer. Sometimes he's a fugitive absconder scaring off unwanted house hunters nearby, but mostly he submits to pampering Pig Spas and lengthy tummy scratchings, providing a soothing and contrary complement to "the dangers and jaws of the jungle."

PRETTY, AFFORDABLE

Porch and Wardrobe (23 Mystic St., Arlington; 781-641-3325) is a consignment shop/gift shop. Turn off Mass. Ave. at the Historic Cyrus Dallin House. Consignment by appointment.

Two sweet little shops come together here, a mini–gift area and a consignment shop, tucked away in a little street that looks like England. The "h" in the "Porch" sign is an old chair. "Arlington is a real town—people like it," says co-owner Laura Bronisz-Wisner. Here you'll find household and kitchen things, bringing together the decorative and the useful. A cast-iron pig serves fetchingly as a doorstop. Little hammers and pliers, the essence of the utilitarian, are girlishly adorned with flowers. By the same token, long rattan Asian canoes and graceful wooden bowls elevate the lowly status of nuts and chips. For these gifts (and self-gifts), the prices are shockingly low. So it is in the consignment area for contemporary women's clothing: Interesting, pretty, even sexy clothes like an orange skirt with an openwork lace hem, a dress with a pattern that looks like an abstract painting and a smoky-black sheath skirt—simple enough for every fancy enough for a party—cost around $12–$20 each. There's the occasional Lily Pulitzer sparkly top or two. But jeans and loose linen skirts and pants are more the mode.

DIVINE DINING

Om's modern take on American cuisine leads Harvard Square into unexplored territory.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Winthrop Square has become the epicenter of fine dining in Cambridge. UpStairs on the Square migrated here after being eased out of its Hasty Pudding Club venue by Harvard a few years ago. Relative newcomers Tamarind Bay and Tanjore have sprouted up across the street and around the corner. Rialto, in the Charles Hotel, and Harvest, on Brattle Street, are within a stone's throw. Now Om, an upscale, serious restaurant, sits at the south end of the square, flanking UpStairs and challenging it for culinary hegemony.

Using the main entrance, I found little evidence of life, let alone a fancy restaurant. Cautiously I ventured up an open staircase to the second level; still no sign to direct me to Om. However, an elaborately carved, dark wooden wall at the top of the staircase, with its unmarked door, looked intriguing, and I entered. Voilà! I was in a handsome, L-shaped room with subdued lighting and an extravagant array of Nepalese Buddhas and other statues and busts in various materials—stone, brass, bronze. Impressive, colorfully painted fabric panels hang from the ceiling, while two others are mounted on the wall, illuminated by small spotlights. Opposite, at the far end of the dining room, a carved Nepalese stone wall flanked by carefully laid fieldstones makes a striking statement. Booths and well-spaced tables with upholstered banquettes and black wooden chairs with fabric seats provide a comfortable dining environment.

The extravagance of its décor and its Nepalese theme and name might suggest Eastern cuisine, or perhaps fusion. In fact, Om's cuisine is modern American eclectic, ably executed by Rachel Klein, who made the pilgrimage from New York City to Boston by way of Providence, where she was an award-winning chef at the X.O. Café. On my two visits to Om, refined amuses-bouches set the tone and heralded evenings of serious dining. The first of these, tuna sashimi on a thin slice of cucumber surrounded with a dribble of mild chili coulis, teased the taste buds with its refreshing, crisp flavors. On my second visit, bluefish pâté, blended with cream cheese, shallots, tarragon and celery, proved a pleasant savory treat.

Scallops with pea purée

Among the appetizers, deconstructed Caesar salad ($12) ranked among my favorites. Built around a crisp but tender heart of romaine lettuce, it included a pair of deep-fried white anchovies, mild but distinctive; fingerling potatoes; a thin slice of Parmesan cheese; confit of lemon; and an al dente spear of asparagus. The salad's crowning glory was a soft-boiled egg (perfectly cooked, with soft egg white and runny yolk) still in its shell, perched on a pewter ring and served with its own spoon. In lieu of dressing, a Parmesan emulsion decorated the plate. This flair for eye-pleasing presentation prevailed throughout both my meals at Om. In contrast to the Caesar salad, the borscht ($11) was constructed at the table, with our waiter pouring hot broth with baby red beets from a small cast-iron teapot into a large bowl containing smoked potatoes, sour cream, mild young ginger and coriander. Full-bodied and satisfying yet refined in its simplicity and the clarity of its flavors, the borscht made a terrific first course.

The Korean beef salad ($17), less successful, consisted of a few ultrathin slices of beef sirloin rubbed with chili and brown sugar, atop a slab of ripe watermelon with an Asian herb salad. Although an interesting combination, it left me unenthusiastic, like an "interesting" blind date. Better was the soft-shell crab ($16), with fresh crab lightly battered and fast-fried to a crispy turn, accompanied by a busy but delicious garnish of creamed corn, fingerling potatoes, garlic chives and a smattering of greens. Rivaling the borscht and Caesar salad as Om's most enjoyable appetizers, the Okinawa sweet ravioli ($15) featured tender, velvety-textured pasta stuffed with distinctive, mellow sweet potatoes from the Ryukyu Islands, together with a garnish of green Chinese long beans. What made the dish extraor was the Thai-chili broth enlivene lime and (very mild) microcilantr least successful appetizer, the Hudson foie gras ($19), paired a large lobe fatty liver with small wedges of pec pickled muscat grapes, sweet-sour ga made from Banyuls (a French swee from a town on the Mediterranean n Spanish border), and a whisper of gr found the foie gras mushy in texture haps it was insufficiently seared. Th also suffered from excessive sweetnes ticularly that contributed by the pec which turned out to be as bad an ide was bizarre. The pickled muscat grap the other hand, were terrific, and h sweet components of the dish beer fined to the grapes and the gastric would've provided a nice counterpo the richness of the liver.

Of Om's main co an exquisite duet o ($26) left me speec The dish paired moist, tender slic grilled pork loin w generous block of b pork belly (unsm bacon), rich and int flavorful. A garni sweet-and-sour cabbage provided a foil for the rich while an apple tarda—chunks of roasted with Dijon tard—formed a particularly tasty em ment of that pork-friendly fruit. Mu duck ($28) rivaled the pork in its goodness. Tender, rare and juicy sli duck breast with rich, crispy skin shar plate with pleasantly bitter mustard g and sweetly rich dates. A dividend wi duck, a phyllo dough pie called a bis came stuffed with duck confit, sea with saffron, cinnamon and more of th crocilantro, and served in a tiny cas frying pan. This traditional Moroccan usually made with pigeon rather than was as enjoyable as it was unusual. and eggs ($36) consisted of a thick, g filet mignon, which although it had ordered medium-well (and arrived boasted an extraordinarily delicious oving to seafood, the escolar ($30), a ly oily, white-fleshed fish from the cal and temperate waters of the South c, had a soft texture and flavor not un- halibut. A marvelously varied garnish by zucchini sliced lengthwise, tem- fried squash blossoms, a pool of basil rugula pesto, and a whole Hawaiian king prawn with crunchy texture and flavor enhanced the dish, as did a -hot Japanese mayonnaise called ni mentaiko, its distinctive flavor and color coming from chili-cured cod roe.

white-fleshed monchong ($26), a water fish from Hawaii, came with a of exquisite mushrooms, which Chef later informed had been gathered in oods by a local forager. The starch ac- animent to the monchong, however, readful: a bland substance that stuck e roof of the mouth like prep school en à la king. Finally, Georges Bank ps ($26) brought four giant, perfectly ed sea scallops surrounded by a sweet sh pea purée and a pleasant hash of ed Chinese sausage and chanterelle rooms.

n's desserts, created by pastry chef tina Valente (who has since left the rant), were surprisingly small despite double-digit prices. However, Klein promises that a new dessert lineup is in the works. Included were a couple of superb confections that made up in quality what they lacked in size. Best was a coconut layer cake ($12), very light and almost ethereal. Black Forest cake ($12) included Bing cherries soaked in liquor, a layer of creamy chocolate mousse, and intensely chocolate cake that was actually moist, unlike all too many deadly dry Black Forest cakes. Om's wine list, aggressively priced, did offer the affordable 2004 Pojere Sandri ($35), made from muller thurgau, a Northern Italian white wine grape from the Trentino. Crisp, slightly effervescent, with good acidity, it made a fine accompaniment for the seafood. Among the reds, the 2002 Rosso di Montalcino from Sassetti ($45), was a serviceable sangiovese with decent bouquet, but not particularly distinguished at that price.

Service at Om ranged from pleasant, informed and attentive (perhaps too attentive) on my first visit, to overbearing and condescending on my second. On that evening, the waiter was so busy pushing pricey cocktails ($12) and bottled water ($7), and trying to up-sell from the wine list, that he failed to bring the charming Parmesan truffled popcorn that Om serves in lieu of bread at the beginning of a meal. He mixed up the main courses for two of our party of six, and when he brought the white wine, he neglected to bring a wine bucket until we specifically requested it. Perhaps he was having a bad evening, but a restaurant as attractive and otherwise inviting as Om should not have its ambiance diminished by one waiter's off-night. iB

Tasty Time Travel

With its décor of faux-painted stone walls and marble columns, azure ceiling with puffy clouds, and black vinyl tufted booths, Verona Restaurant in Watertown Square has a retro feeling that may remind you of Italian restaurants from years ago. In fact, it was originally owned by the father of the current chef/owner, Tino Farese. What makes it worth your time is the old-fashioned quality of the retro Italian fare, not to mention the ridiculously low prices. Nobody makes better eggplant parmigiana than Farese. Right now, Verona is featuring a dinner-for-two special for—get this—just $25. Any appetizer, any entrée, any dessert and a cup of coffee. That means you can pig out on, for example, Caesar salad and shrimp cacciatore, while your companion enjoys homemade soup, fish of the day (with homemade Delmonico potatoes), and traditional Indian pudding with ice cream. CityScope: Sounds Like Teen Spirit

For the opposite of the usual stuffy, yawnful charitable affair, check out Berklee College of Music's Milestones Gala. To benefit Berklee's City Music Program, which provides music training to disadvantaged youth, some of the urban music scene's top talents converge on the Berklee Performance Center for a jam-packed evening of performances. The event, emceed by Fab 5 Freddy of Yo! MTV Raps fame, features appearances by Al Kooper (founder of Blood, Sweat & Tears and organist for Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones, B.B. King and Jimi Hendrix), jazz saxophonist and 11-time Grammy winner Michael Brecker, Grand Mix DXT (the first DJ to infuse hip-hop with jazz) and DJ Premier, a producer whose collaborators include Jay-Z, Biggie and Nas. Berklee's own Turntablism Ensemble also performs, and the school will honor key innovators in the music industry, including recording engineers, DJs and music producers. Proceeds help endow scholarships for students who attend the school's five-week teen music program. *Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass. Movies: Monster Mash

Maybe you've been sitting around all summer, eagerly awaiting the opportunity to unleash your inner zombie. Or maybe you're just in the mood to freak out some straight-edge Brookliners. Either way, head over to the Coolidge Corner Theatre at midnight on Sept. 22 for J. Cannibal's Feast of Flesh. The ghoulish event, led by real-life undertaker and zombie lover J. Cannibal, is a celebration of all things terrifying. The festivities kick off with a musical performance from Humanwine, whose music was once described as "an arresting and indescribable noise," and is followed by a demonstration by James Royalty: Prince of Pain, whose show features the public torture of his zombie slave. Black Cat Burlesque's Mary Widow takes the stage next and leads her crew of undead dancers (as well as audience members) in a Thriller Dance Party, which runs right up to the evening's main attraction, a screening of 1977's Shock Waves, a heartbreaking story of a group of travelers who land on a remote island, only to discover that a reclusive Nazi commandant has been breeding an army of zombie soldiers. Ah, they just don't write zombie movies like they used to.... Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.jcannibal.com. 12 am. $10. —RL

"Inside Ground Zero" by Jonathon Smith, for Joel Meyerowitz Studio

THU./SEPT. 14

Books: Photographic Memory

To commemorate the fifth anniversary of the Sept. 11 tragedy, the Brattle Theatre and Harvard Book Store host award-winning photographer Joel Meyerowitz for an evening of slide images and a discussion of his new book, Aftermath: The World Trade Center Archive, comprising Meyerowitz's previously unpublished images from ground zero. As the only photographer granted unimpeded access to the site, Meyerowitz snapped images that blur the line between history and art. In addition to being featured in more than 350 exhibitions around the world, including solo shows at some of the country's most prestigious museums and galleries, the photos are now part of the permanent collection at the Museum of the City of New York. Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-661-1515). 6:30 pm. $5. —LPK

SAT.–SUN./SEPT. 23–24

Music: Blues Times Two

It's a rare occasion this far north of the Mason-Dixon Line to have two blues festivals in one weekend, but such is our luck this fall. The annual Boston Blues Fest takes place at the Hatch Shell on Sept. 23 and 24 from noon to 6 pm each day. Better yet: It's free. Although you might want to bring warm blankets for this late-in-the-season outdoor concert, it's worth the shivers with a lineup that includes old-school acts such as Finis Tasby, Jimmy and the Soul Cats, Danny Vitale and Loaded Dice, the Dave Hanno and Boston Blues Express. For a longer journey, the first-ever New England Blue Festival ($22.50 in advance, $25 at the gate) takes place at Batis Field in Middleb Sept. 24, rain or shine. The gates open at 11 am, and music begins at noon. Acts the Scissormen, the Tullamores, Professor Harp, Three Horse and the headliner Montgomery, who goes on at 4 pm. Boston Blues Fest, DCR Hatch Shell, Charles Boston (617-905-6866). www.bluestrust.com; New England Blues Festival, Batis Fie 26 Jackson St., Middleboro (508-728-8800). www.nebluesfest.com. —LPK

You don't know much about the Phantom Gourmet. Sure, you know where he li eat, and maybe you know the types of dishes he orders, but everything else about wily fellow is just a straight-up mystery. On Sept. 23, however, we'll be concerne just one piece of information about the elusive Phantom: Can he throw a kick-a Find out from 11 am to 4 pm, as the annual Phantom Gourmet Food Festival (cosponsored by the IMPROPER) returns to Lansdowne Street. The highlight of th of course, is the food, with more than 30 local restaurants in attendance offering sample goodies like jambalaya from the Sunset Grill, cherrystone clams from the Summer Shack, sausage sandwiches from the Sausage Guy and hot dogs from Spi Junkyard Dogs. But food isn't the only attraction. While DJ Stevie Ray keeps the rolling outside, many of Lansdowne's clubs will be throwing themed parties. The Mardi Gras bash at Avalon, a Magic 106.7 dance party at Axis, a karaoke jam at Bar, a jazz-themed wine, cheese and chocolate tasting at the Modern and much m Tickets for this 21+ event cost $30 (they won't be sold at the door, so plan ahead anyone who shows up wearing the Phantom's trademark purple gets a $5 gift card restaurants all over Greater Boston. A Deep Sleep

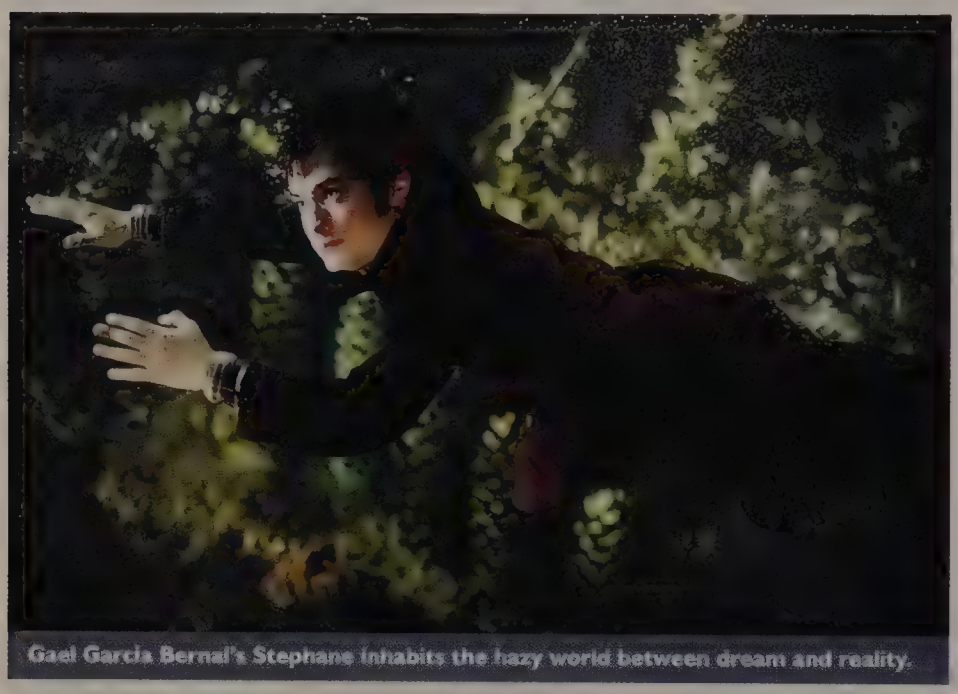
Michel Gondry's Science of Sleep explores the depths of an artist's angst.

BY SEAN BURNS

As our movie screens become increasingly overrun with computer-generated spectacles, the rickety, lo-fi wonders conjured by director Michel Gondry couldn't be more welcome. A music video maestro who recently helmed the extraordinary Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind, this 43-year-old Frenchman toys with screen space and perceptions, using primitive camera trickery almost as ancient as the medium itself, somehow producing visuals that feel sophisticated by virtue of their very simplicity. So many images we see in cinema today are too obviously made out of ones and zeroes on somebody's workstation, but Gondry's retro eyepoppers seem to have sprung directly from his inner child's cluttered playroom. His movies have an artisan's lovingly handmade touch.



Gael Garcia Bernal's Stephane inhabits the hazy world between dream and reality.

My pick for the best film of 2004, Eternal Sunshine took place almost entirely inside star Jim Carrey's head, after he'd foolishly arranged for a sci-fi brain-erasing procedure to zap all traces of his romance with Kate Winslet's darling Clementine. Gondry filmed the character's memories as fragile wisps; lovely artifacts at odd angles in which props and sets would disappear in the blink of a camera's pan, thanks to some shocking cinematic sleight-of-hand.

Deeply, at times almost unbearably moving, the movie benefited from the richest, most carefully considered screenplay yet by postmodern whiz kid Charlie Kaufman, who rocketed to cult stardom after writing Being John Malkovich and Adaptation for director Spike Jonze.

Most would like to forget that in 2001, Michel Gondry made his feature debut with Kaufman's Human Nature. That particularly misguided project felt overcontrolled to an almost suffocating extent; its visual scheme as coldly polished and remote as Sunshine's was urgently sloppy and personal.

The Science of Sleep, Gondry's first fictional film made without Kaufman's input, is a self-penned, brazenly autobiographical cup of whimsy—taking that urgently sloppy and personal Eternal Sunshine M.O. and riding it straight into the sun. This is a sometimes brilliant, occasionally infuriating, always visually astonishing film of often-embarrassing self-pity, stuffed with moments so breathtakingly romantic that they'll remind you why we go to the movies in the first place.

Half the time, I couldn't wait for it to be over, and the rest of the time I wished it would never end. This is one unwieldy, ungodly, altogether glorious mess of a thing.

Mexican heartthrob Gael Garcia Bernal stars as Stephane, a confused, hypersensitive young artist who returns to Paris still reeling from the death of his father. His mother (played by the pricelessly named Miou-Miou) tricks her son into taking a job at a calendar factory, where all his coworkers are far too concerned with the annual company ski trip to be bothered with any of Stephane's pretensions toward artistic greatness. The hilarious Alain Chabat is on hand as the generically named Guy—a darkly comic representation of every middle-aged, middle-class worker bee who has no real interests beyond getting wasted and laid after a long, hard week at the office. He's also the funniest dude in the movie.

But Stephane is simply not cut out for this nine-to-five life. For starters, the poor kid has a bit of a problem separating his dreams from reality. He hosts his own nocturnal chat show (Stephane TV!), complete with cardboard cameras and egg-crate sets, and as this boy genius' surreal slumbers bleed into his everyday reality, it becomes increasingly difficult for the audience to tell whether our poor hero is asleep or awake.

But what we can tell is that he pines for his fetching next-door neighbor Stephanie, played by the swan-necked, sad-eyed Charlotte Gainsbourg. She's a bit more uptight and grounded than Stephane, but then again, who isn't? Gondry works a special kind of magic whenever these two are on-screen together—suddenly faucets run crinkly blue cellophane instead of water, childhood toys come alive and clumps of stuffing from a ripped pillow hang in the air like puffy cumulus clouds. Helped in no small part by the marvelous chemistry between his leads, Gondry captures that dizzy, anything-goes sensation of puppy love's first exhilarating rush.

Such fleeting flights of ecstasy aren't quite enough to sustain a feature-length narrative, but you'll be surprised at how close they come. Bernal has such a relaxed, child-like spin on the character, even his creepiest behavior comes off as endearing. Gainsbourg does him one better, guardedly easing herself into a relationship she knows neither of them is quite ready to handle.

I'd be lying if I didn't admit that all this enchantment grows wearying over the course of the film's too-long 105 minutes, and Stephane's "misunderstood artiste" shtick (he's too obviously a stand-in for Gondry himself) feels a bit too self-serving.

And yet I woke up a few days after The Science of Sleep still marveling at images, like that vast cityscape made entirely out of cardboard tubing, and humming the film's kooky riffs on the Velvet Underground's "After Hours." The movie lingers in the mind like a wonderful, half-remembered dream, which I guess is the point. iB fun to watch talented people fall on their hich is sadly the case in this sprawling, inter- ly exuberant mess of a musical from the bril- nre-smashing hip-hop duo OutKast. In other s about all of us. (At Boston Common, Fen- dall Square and in the suburbs.)

Miami Vice ★★★½
Don't expect any pastel fashion plates or Phil Collins sing-alongs in writer-director Michael Mann's bracingly adult big-screen blow-up of his seminal 1980s TV series. Launching Crockett and Tubbs into the 21st century with nary a trace of nostalgia, Mann shoots this darker, nastier, but just as heavily stylized Vice in state-of-the-art digital video, pushing the boundaries of mainstream narrative filmmaking in cryptic, experimental new directions. The plot is standard-issue undercover cops-and-robbers double-dealing, but the visuals and sound are given a hypnotic, almost abstract quality. Colin Farrell and Jamie Foxx star as the well-dressed detectives, mumbling gruff, staccato tough-guy lines and dispatching baddies with ruthless efficiency. Chinese movie legend Gong Li costars as a high-ranking money launderer who falls into a swoony affair with Farrell's conscience-stricken Crockett. She can barely speak English, but in a film that's made up of 90 percent longing gazes, she hardly needs to. The very definition of style over substance, Miami Vice is all about the vibe: macho, heartsick and foreboding. The movie is simply mesmerizing from first frame to last. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Monster House ★★★
Executive produced by Steven Spielberg and Robert Zemeckis, this raucous, 3D computer-animated children's yarn is a throwback to ripping 1980s Amblin Entertainment adventures like Gremlins and The Goonies. With his parents away on Halloween weekend, young puberty-stricken D.J. (voiced by Michael Musso) discovers that something's not quite right with that old, run-down house across the street. Turns out, it's alive—possessed by a particularly ill-tempered spirit and prone to eating anyone foolish enough to ring the front doorbell. The animation is simply marvelous, anthropomorphizing the very unhappy home into a sinister face, complete with blinking window shades for eyes and a long red carpet that serves as something like a tongue. It's up to D.J. and his pals to venture inside and extinguish the furnace, before countless trick-or-treaters end up as lunch. I'm frankly baffled as to why any studio would release this Halloween delight in the middle of the summer, but it's one boisterously entertaining kid's flick, refreshingly devoid of the pop culture references and bathroom jokes that mar most children's entertainment these days. (At Capitol Theatre and in the suburbs.)

The Quiet ★
A sordid, unintentionally hilarious sex thriller, director Jamie Babbit's sophomore effort strains to hearken back to the mid-'90s glory days of late-night-cable erotic schlock (an era also referred to as "Drew Barrymore's Naughty Period"). Problem is, The Quiet confuses sleaze with titillation, spinning an altogether icky tale of an abused cheerleader (24's always-imperiled Elisha Cuthbert) plotting with her deaf, recently adopted sister (Camilla Belle) to murder their creepy, child-molesting father. The inept screenplay by Abdi Nazemian and Micah Schraft drops leaden bunker-busters of exposition at every turn; these characters tirelessly explain to one another what is clearly visible in every scene. There are also plenty of time-outs for the usual smug scolding about depression and dysfunction running rampant in American suburbs. One would assume that with Desperate Housewives airing on a Disney-owned network every Sunday night, indie filmmakers might finally stop treating this hoary old chestnut as some sort of breaking news. But alas, even Edie Falco gives a rare terrible performance as a pill-popping (wait for it!) desperate housewife. (At Kendall Square.)

Scoop ★½
If Woody Allen isn't even going to try anymore, then I don't see why we should have to bother, either. The 36th theatrical feature written and directed by the grindingly prolific Allen, Scoop feels like it only exists thanks to sheer force of habit. It's a wan, wheezy affair, made up almost entirely of scenes from Allen's earlier films. Remember the good old days when Woody used to rip off masters like Bergman and Fellini? Now he's just ripping off himself. Scarlett Johansson stars as a dim-bulb, slatternly journalism student who somehow magically receives clues regarding the identity of a London serial killer from the ghost of a hard-boiled reporter, played by Deadwood's Ian McShane (who's slumming here). Woody himself tags along as an annoying vaudeville magician who, like most of the movie's one-liners, seems to have been transplanted from the 1930s. Shot entirely in static master shots, and lifting giant chunks of story directly from Alice, Broadway Danny Rose and Manhattan Murder Mystery, Scoop is stunningly lazy and inert, even by the lax standards of Allen's late career. (At Capitol Theatre, Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Snakes on a Plane ★★★
For a plot synopsis, see title. This exuberantly lousy, wildly entertaining crap-tacular keys into everybody's two worst fears: reptiles and flying. Don't pretend for a second that the massive underground phenomenon that's sprung up around this flick isn't our collective post–Sept. 11 paranoia weirdly metastasizing itself into schlock. Replace the snakes with Al Qaeda and you've got United 93—but then again, that particular movie didn't have Sam Jackson cussing up a storm while swatting away fake-looking computer-generated snakes in the cockpit. (Remember, those Godzilla flicks are all not so secretly about Hiroshima.) Snakes on a Plane is a proudly brain-dead affair, and yet something absurdly entertaining and unexpected seems to happen roughly every five minutes or so. Director David Ellis is a killer craftsman, striking just the right half-kidding tone. He never veers into the camp that would make this all a postmodern joke, and at the same time never quite takes himself seriously enough for it to become dull. This is a quick, efficient exploitation picture, with Z-grade special effects and a contagious, slap-happy spirit. Bad movies should always be this much fun! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

World Trade Center ★★★
Is the world ready for the feel-good Sept. 11 movie of the year? In sharp contrast to Paul Greengrass' harrowing, verité-style United 93, Oliver Stone's World Trade Center is a lavishly produced, old-fashioned Hollywood melodrama. It's so mawkish and corny that I'm almost uncomfortable admitting just how much I liked it. Nicolas Cage stars as Port Authority cop John McLoughlin, who along with fellow officer Will Jimeno (played by Crash's locksmith Michael Pena), wound up trapped beneath a mountain of rubble and concrete some 20 feet under the WTC's collapsed concourse. Devoid of the hyperkinetic audio-visual feeding frenzies that have marked Stone's work since the early '90s, World Trade Center is photographed as an almost stately procession of bold, simple images. It's a good movie, but a movie nonetheless—one with big stars, clichés, a rousing score and a happy ending that bends over backward to warm your heart. I don't want to sound like those people who whine that it's "too soon" for films about Sept. 11, but perhaps a small part of me does feel that it might be too soon for one this slick and reassuring. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

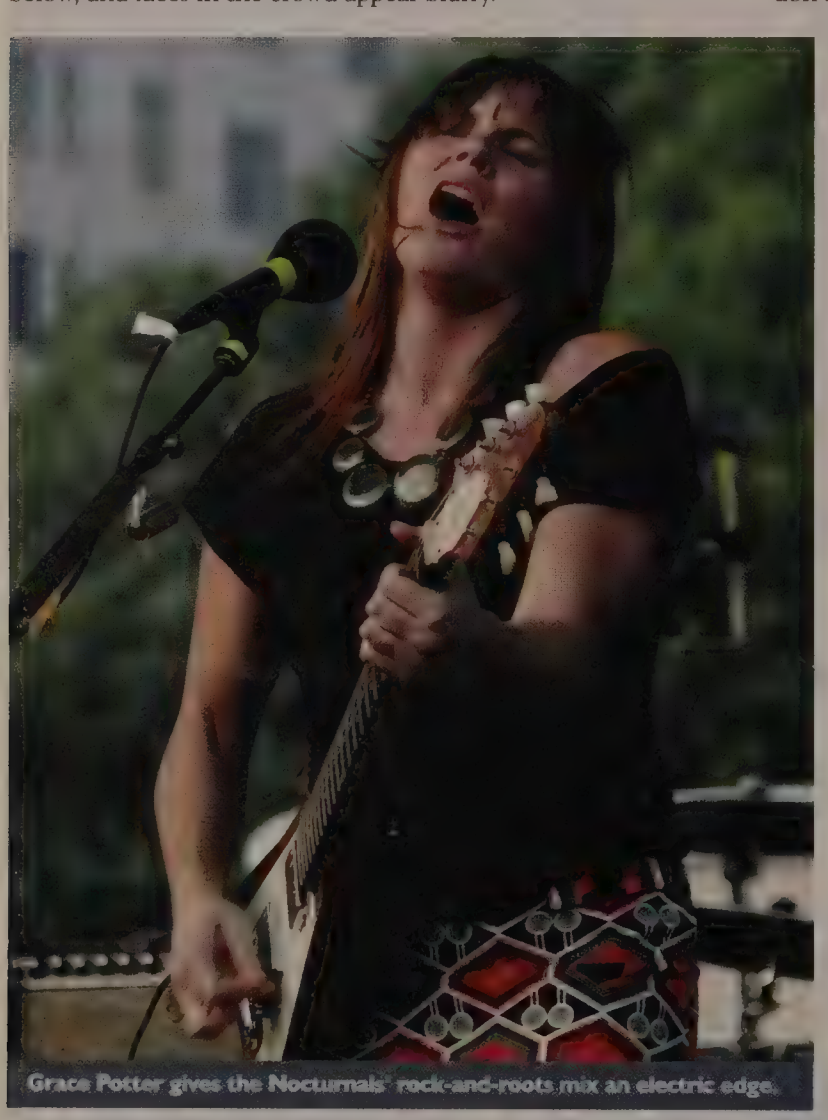
State of Grace

Vermont's Nocturnals plug into an edgier, more rock 'n' roll sound.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Sorry to break the news to guys checking out Grace Potter and the Nocturnals in concert with hopes that the 23-year-old dynamo fronting the band will look their way. It's a little-known fact, but Potter is legally blind. She has mistaken shadows from her Hammond organ's upper deck for black keys below, and faces in the crowd appear blurry.



Grace Potter gives the Nocturnals' rock-and-roots mix an electric edge.

"I don't really like looking at the audience because I find it distracting," Potter says. "I connect with people as a body of energy, not a cute guy in the second row."

That body of energy is highly charged of late, flowing both ways. Fans can't stand still for the soulful blend of rock, blues and roots music churned up by the spunky singer and her Nocturnal mates. They've become Vermont's hottest musical export since Phish, opening for that band's former ringleader Trey Anastasio, Taj Mahal and the Dave Matthews Band, and playing Bonnaroo and the Newport Folk Festival.

"It's one of those times when you buck up and do it," says Potter, whose hard-gigging band holds court at the Paradise Sept. 29-30. "We have to think of it as a gift. Why slow down now? The opportunity may never come again."

The quartet still took its sweet time picking a record deal from eager major labels, finally signing with Disney-owned Hollywood Records, which just re-released the group's 2005 sophomore CD Nothing But the Water. "We wanted to make sure we're doing the right thing," says the singer, whose band wanted independence and noncompeting label mates. "I don't feel like we're fighting over a spot with Hilary Duff."

Indeed, Potter usually gets compared to early Bonnie Raitt, Aretha Franklin and Janis Joplin. "There's a difference between being influenced and being inspired," says Potter, who was weaned on her parents' wall of classic vinyl. "I only take comparisons as a compliment, and turn around and play my Flying V. I don't think any of them did that."

Yes, the keyboardist is also rocking a Flying V guitar these days that produces an electric sound closer to the Rolling Stones than the mellow, folky fare she was playing when she met drummer Matt Burr in 2002. "He would bang on the counters while I was playing Joni Mitchell–style piano ballads," she says from a vacation stop at Burr's parents. "He finally came up to me and said, 'I think you need a drummer.'"

The pair added an upright bassist and dubbed themselves the Nocturnals for their late-night rehearsals. But they sealed their identity when groove-savvy bassist Bryan Dondero and guitarist Scott Tournet came aboard. "The addition of Scott was a huge shift," she says. "It was rock 'n' roll and not just a jazz trio anymore, especially since he played slide for that crunchy country-blues sound. Things really caught fire from there."

Tournet's resonator guitar touches complemented Potter's Hammond B-3 swirl on Nothing But the Water, an album that was recorded in an old Goddard College theater and peaks with a gospel-fueled title track. But arrangements are different for their Hollywood debut, due for recording in Los Angeles this fall. "I'm not a city girl, but I'm sure being in L.A. will feed the creative juices in its own way," says Potter, who expects a more rocking effort since she began writing on guitar last year—and playing the electric onstage.

"It's less cerebral and more visceral," she says of the changes. "The sound we're looking for has something edgy about it, but I hope it still appeals to a wide audience."

It'll also be darker and more personal, says Potter, who previously channeled a "lady in my head" character in her songs. "It was an older version of myself—she's sassy and I like her," the singer says. "With this [next record], it'll be more personal experiences. Maybe it'll seem less 'beyond her years' and more 'true to her years.' As I'm getting older, I'm having my own experiences that I can reflect on, and not have to borrow other people's."

Potter grew up in Vermont's tiny Mad River Valley town of Waitsfield, where most of the band still lives in her family's compound, affectionately dubbed "Hobbitville."

"It's built like the Shire in The Lord of the Rings," she says. "My parents are both short. I have to duck when I walk through the doorways." Her father makes signs and her mother wooden bowls, so it offered an artistic environment. Further musical inspiration came from her great uncle Spiegel Wilcox, a onetime trombonist with Tommy Dorsey.

"He would say, 'If you're doing what gives you the most joy, there's no need to question,'" Potter says of Wilcox, who died in 2001. "It was the coolest advice, especially from a 96-year-old guy with a twinkle in his eye." IB

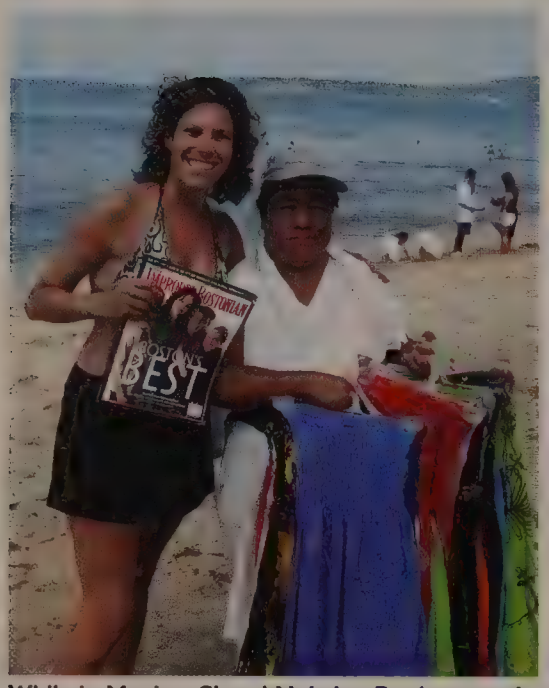
Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

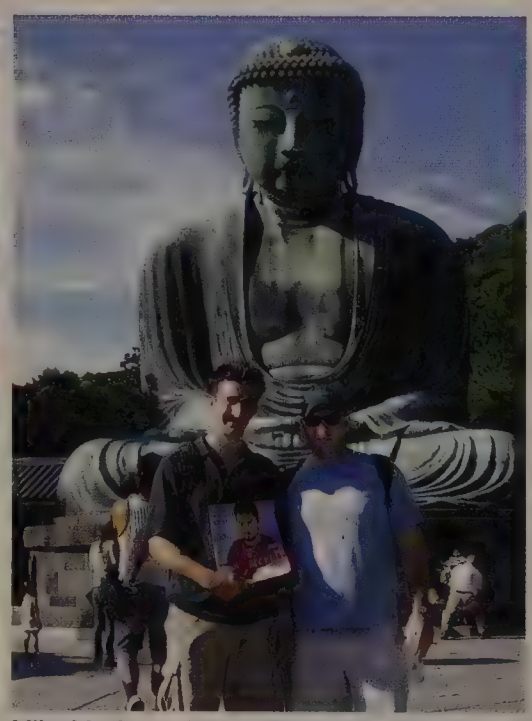


While in Mexico, Sherri Nobriga-Bonica posed with Maria, who sells dresses on the beach (and dabbles in seashells down by the seashore).

Katherine Byrne trekked up to Barrow, Alaska (the northernmost point in North America). Afterwards, she visited the area in central Alaska that has a 1,000-foot whale's tail coming out of the ground.

While stationed in southwest Asia, Airman Greg Gresha took in Kevin Federline's U.S.O. Tour show. This was th biggest turnout K-Fed saw during 15 worldwide shows.

Hillary and Anne Francis checked out Boston's Irish counterpart, but were unfortunately fined shortly after taking this photo. Apparently, Moinin na gCloigeann means "Keep off the grass."



Mike Moyles and Matt Fifield visited the Great Buddha in Kamakura, Japan. That's pretty cool, but not as cool as looking just like Nomar.

Tony Budri and Mike Colanti cruised by Hubbard Glacie Yakutat, Alaska. The glacier was named after explorer Hubbard, but we bet Tom Cruise would tell you differe

Cold Comfort

Michelina: I remember the day when I first saw you in the frozen foods aisle at Star Market. Amidst the overwhelming cacophony of Lean Cuisines, Healthy Choices and SmartOnes microwave entrées, you gazed at me with a stern, loving expression that said, "Take me home—I'm delicious, health-conscious and three for four dollars." Ever since then, you've delighted and surprised me with dishes such as fettuccine alfredo, mac 'n' cheese and—il mio favorito—whole wheat rotini with prosciutto and basil. How is it that your ready-made meals are so tasty, so satisfying and yet so inexpensive? I know that I haven't always been faithful to you, but please know that Wendy means nothing to me. Her super value menu and new, deli-style frescatta sandwiches may temporarily satisfy, but it's you to whom I come home, your face I carry to work each day, and your voice that beckons when I feel empty inside. Grazie for making me such a happy man.

Don't You Dare Stare

This is for all the old geezers on Boylston that can't let a skirt walk by every morning when I walk to work: Dream on honey, but do yourself (and me, and all of us) a favor and try to keep your head from swinging 360 degrees as a hardworking female crosses the sidewalk. Here's a suggestion: If you absolutely cannot control your neck muscles (for which you should seek medical attention), exercise your eyelids and close them! But if you're that young, well-groomed banker in the blue suit, then, hey, saying "Hi" once in a while won't kill you.
—Damsel in Distress

T is for eTiquette

Hey people, how about some common courtesy? When you're sitting down and an elderly or disabled person gets on, stand up and offer your seat! Always offer your seat to a mother with kids. And hold the door for those running to the T, will ya?! In a nice tone, say "excuse me" as you're trying to make your way to the exit. And lastly, say "thank you" to the driver when you leave. Let's all work for some decency now.
—A Disgusted T Rider

Pen Pal in the Pen

I'm 19 years old, 5'10" and have light brown skin and pecan brown eyes. My hair is short with lots of waves. I'm half black and half Spanish. I think I'm pretty smart and have a sexy body. I guarantee that you won't be disappointed! I'm looking for a pen-pal—someone to grow with me through pen and paper. If you're interested, write to me.

Can You Handle This Bull?

To the beautiful Boston ladies: I'm currently incarcerated and seeking a woman to correspond with. I'm African-American and Native-American, 5'10", 225 pounds with the body of a god, short hair, a honey-golden complexion and hazel eyes. I'm open-minded and understanding, have a good sense of humor and dislike being lied to. I'm a 24-year-old Taurus and I always handle my adversities in stride. I have no specific preferences for my search. I only ask that you be genuine and understanding.

Take Your Crazy Pill, Bus 39

To the drivers of Bus 39: Whatever happened to safety coming first? Every morning and afternoon when I commute to work, I encounter shocking conduct from the drivers. Whether it's running red lights, stopping the bus on the side of the street for stupid reasons or flying by stops while patient Bostonians wait for their ride to work, I'm astounded by the madness of Bus 39! Please be more considerate to those who not only need to get to work on time but also want to survive their daily commute!
—Ticked Off Traveller

Rippin' the Republic

To some, not all, of the folks in good ol' Cambridge: OK, I know I don't live on your side of the river. I know I might not be up on the latest holistic treatments, alternative political parties, or innovative ways to farm organic veggies, meat and anything else that's sold in the grocery store, but come on people. Get a life. I go, I visit, I drive there. And I breathe deeply whenever you cross the street without the right of way. But your hypocrisies are sometimes too much to stomach. Try being yourself.
—Just an Observer

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery.

So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see!

GO AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Birthday. There's no need to act like the Hermit (the Virgo card in the tarot) this ou're entertaining sociable Venus in your sign until the end of the month. And he goddess of love and beauty will warm your heart, she can also make you fairly ible to others. Why not use this attraction to lure the oddballs, dissidents and asts you admire to your side for a special occasion? Plan it for Sept. 15 so you can from the magnetism between Venus and Uranus in your Pisces house of partners.

RA

go overboard. That's the tendency to guard against nergetic Mars is transiting Libra for the first time in ars. Fiery Mars can also make you quite the hot-head, a reasonable Libra rarely assumes) as well as s enough to hurt yourself. Remember that the brave r planet rules your Aries marriage house and that, no what sign your partner is, you're the one who keeps on an even keel. Nonetheless, with your Venus ruler cal Virgo, you probably have plenty to bitch about.

ORPIO

OBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

friends and colleagues want to spend more time with t them. That's the zone in your solar chart that's ctivated by the personal planets, the ones that move t a pretty pace. Family life seems fairly stable for the ing. However, money matters could heat up around e the Virgo sun tests your Pluto coruler's resolve. If a chance you'll be affected by a financial scandal, e second half of this month can be painful or assing. If not, then Jupiter in your sign should e to protect you.

GITTARIUS

EMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

lipses this month in two mutable signs can leave you ing if and when another shoe is going to drop. The ber-born Centaur, in particular, may feel trapped n what follows from the Pisces full moon on Sept. 7 at the Virgo new moon on Sept. 23 will cook up next. ile you're waiting to find out, you'll probably be ng at the bit. Although seers can assess a situation leveloping, an eclipse may add or more likely take element you were counting on. This is where your ck attitude comes in handy.

PRICORN

MBER 22–JANUARY 20

get busy. With single-minded, physically fit Mars in ra midheaven for the first time in two years, it'll be han you think to go after whatever goal you've set for —whether it's to run a marathon or get through ool, as long as you exercise both body and brains. To th the book learning, use Mercury's transit of Libra, rill be joined soon enough by the all-powerful sun. us on your reputation stands you in good stead when to career moves and family achievements too.

JARIUS

ARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

e planets that gather in Libra, another intelligent air e more effective you'll be. So far there's ambitious aking its bi-annual visit that could provide the e for a joint financial venture. After Sept.12, Mercury . If you need to research anything to do with taxes, ce or inheritance, be sure to put the Messenger's n to detail to good use. Once autumn begins, you e able to clarify a purely personal matter that's been interpretation far too long.

CES

UARY 19–MARCH 19

a chance that you'll soon find yourself in a position he validity of the old adage: Absence makes the ow fonder. Whether it's a physical distance or an al one, some sort of adjustment takes place midmonth when loving Venus in your Virgo house of partnership opposes unpredictable Uranus in Pisces. There's also a question of who reaches out to whom. One more thing: Your mate may have to accommodate a powerful person around the same time. These are major matters; don't be such a hard-ass.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Pay the piper already and get the paperwork over with. Money might not be the medium of exchange in this case, but if there are promises to fulfill or letters to write, now is the time to do it. That's because literate Mercury in your legalistic Libra complement is set to merge with your Mars ruler, thereby insuring greater attention to the details that, in your usual haste to move on to the next thing, you might otherwise overlook. This way, you'll be on firmer ground if the solar eclipse on the equinox shakes things up a bit.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Now that your appreciative Venus ruler is in Virgo, an earth sign as practical if not quite as romantic as your own, the odds of keeping your feet on the ground during the unpredictable Venus-Uranus polarity midmonth improve considerably. Sometimes this annual aspect brings a welcome surprise, sometimes not. But it invariably leads to an awakening of some sort on your part. If you're worried about an ongoing relationship, then you'd better fortify it ASAP. If you're looking for a fresh face to adore, consider them all.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

For some people, feeling anxious is unacceptable, but for mutable signs like yours, it can be quite exciting. So, during the rest of also mutable Virgo, don't be surprised if you're enjoying the edge. When Twins sense that something is in the wind, they're not about to drop their guard until they know, not merely suspect, what it is. One advantage of mutability is that whether or not you like it, as soon as a situation is presented, you go ahead and make the necessary adjustment. Right now your Mercury ruler is in the sign of the Scales, so your sense of balance is also sharp.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

This time of year, while other signs are back at school or rolling up their sleeves at work, the Moon Child may discover that home and hearth, the area of your solar chart ruled by Libra, is demanding more of your attention. You may be looking at paint chips and measuring for drapes. Blame energetic Mars and informative Mercury for stimulating an even greater interest in domesticity. After the solar eclipse during the autumnal equinox (a sensitive point for all cardinal signs), your need to nest may continue to grow.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Money matters could be the one area you cannot let slide this month. That's because Venus, the ruler of valuables, and your sun ruler are in Virgo—the sign governing your assets. With paper-pushing Mercury and crusading Mars in early Libra, also transiting that second house, there's not much energy (or personal planets) left for other interests. You might as well take a deep breath and suck it up. Attend to financial affairs as quickly and efficiently as you can. When these swift-moving planets move on, your advantage goes with them.

Feelings Are Facts: A Life

Yvonne Rainer

"Ms. Rainer was such a riveting presence, and her ideas were so intense and dazzling, that her personality couldn't help manifesting itself, right below and even above the cool, formalist surface. It was exciting to see it emerge, and emerge it does, too, from the pages of this compulsively readable book." —John Rockwell, The New York Times

Le Corbusier's Hands

André Wogenscky
Translated by Martina Millà Bernad

Le Corbusier's assistant and fellow architect remembers his mentor in a series of concise and poetic reflections.

"A singular complement to Le Corbusier's work, this book is also an inspiring depiction of an artist." — Publishers Weekly

Women Artists at the Millennium

Edited by Carol Armstrong and Catherine de Zegher

Artists, art historians, and critics examine the differences that feminist art practice and critical theory have made in late twentieth-century art and the discourses surrounding it.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the My Sister's Keeper benefit, top row: Liz Walker and Charlayne Hunter-Gault. Middle row: Jacqui Budd and Doris Yaffe; an auction item. Bottom row: Carol Fulp; Revs. Ray Hammond and Gloria White-Hammond

A HUSBAND WHO PLAYS GOLF QUALIFIES AS A HANDICAP...

The fairy-tale cottages of Martha's Vineyard are about as far as possible from the horrors taking place in Sudan, but the two were linked, at least in spirit, when My Sister's Keeper hosted a fundraiser at the Oak Bluffs summer home of journalist, author and television personality Charlayne Hunter-Gault.

The grassroots humanitarian organization, which is dedicated to eradicating injustice throughout Sudan and assisting the country's legions of formerly enslaved women, was co-founded by the incomparable Rev. Gloria White-Hammond, who attended with her husband, the right Rev. Ray. Also spotted on either the porch or the lawn during the reception and live auction: news anchor–turned–woman of the cloth Liz Walker, the eternally chic Carol Fulp, the naturally carbonated Doris Yaffe, Red Cross honcha Deborah Jackson, Boston Foundation muckety-muck Mary Jo Meisner, island artist Dorothy Burnham, über-OB/GYN Ken Edelin and his power-broker wife, Barbara, ubiquitous do-gooder Jacqui Budd, Channel 4 factotum Pat Krieger, the perfectly lovely Melinda Weeks, and guest-auctioneer Bob Glover, who kept everyone chuckling by cutting up while raising a respectable chunk of change for the cause.

Among the auctioned items were everything from paintings to photographs to a handmade quilt, but it was the week-long stay at a condo in South Beach that prompted one guest to joke, "It's one bedroom... which means it sleeps six."

However, the afternoon's most amusing comment came from the woman who hung up her cell phone and dryly remarked, "My husband is on the ninth hole and says he'll be here in a minute."

THAT'S WHAT'S KNOWN AS A FIRST-WORLD PROBLEM...

Sunglasses were an absolute necessity at the Possible Dreams Auction, not only because it was a gorgeous, sunny day but because of the blinding celebrity wattage.

The 28th annual benefit for Martha's Vineyard Community Services, held in the garden at the Harborside Inn in Edgartown, is indisputably the island's biggest bold-faced-names-fest and accordingly attracts a crowd of rubbernecks to gawk at the rich and famous spending beaucoup dinero on things that no one really needs but that you could never buy anywhere else (a luncheon cruise to Nantucket aboard the 91-foot motor yacht Keldi, a backstage party at the American Music Awards, a prerelease screening of the new Arthur movie, etc.).

Prominent among the throng: celebrity auctioneer (and Pulitzer Prize–winning humorist) Art Buchwald, Oscar-winning actresses Patricia Neal and Mary Steenburgen (whose husband, Ted Danson, was absent only because he'd started shooting his new sitcom, Help Me Help You, in L.A.), the most trusted man in America, Walter Cronkite, legendary sitcom writer/producer Marty Nadler (Happy Days, Laverne & Shirley, etc.), and legal eagle Alan Dershowitz, to name a mere handful. Though the seats reserved for Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg and her husband remained empty and Mike Wallace couldn't make it because he was in Iran, Carly Simon did show up to kiss Buchwald and auction off a personal visit to the high bidder's house to hear her sing two songs off her yet-to-be-released album, along with the classic "Nobody Does It Better."

Among the other notables on-hand: co-auctioneers Rick Lee and Susan Klein, who kept the action moving, Back Bay über-philanthropists Bert and Rosalie Cohen, art supplies heiress Laura Spiro, art collector and Washington, D.C., grande dame Olga Hirschhorn (as in the museum), and the toothsome triumvirate of Jodi Wolin, Randace Rauscher-Moore and Claudine Danikian.

While Buchwald joked that there were three auction items they were unable to procure—free drinks for two at a bar where Mel Gibson would personally apologize for his anti-Semitic remarks, a drive through the Big Dig, and two tickets to the Vineyard Haven movie theater (which has been shuttered for two years)—there was plenty of other stuff that went for big bucks, like Bill Clinton's favorite putter (which sold for $22,000) and a luncheon sail aboard Cronk boat (which brought in $30,000).

Meanwhile, there were amusing versers to eavesdrop on, like one wo who said, "We had 12 sailors from the York Yacht Club staying with us. I doing laundry all day because I just wa the maids out of the house. You can't around naked when they're there."

However, our favorite exchange wa following:

"I love the next item."

"So bid on it."

"I can't. My trust fund's too small."

File under "poor little rich girl." iB

RESTAURANT REVOLUTION

We're lucky in Boston to have a lively and varied dining scene that seems to expand by the minute. But as many lifelong Bostonians know, it wasn't always so. In her story "Look Back in Hunger," writer Carolyn Faye Fox, who's lived and dined out in Boston for more than three decades, highlights just a few of the daring chefs, pioneering restaurants and social forces that changed Boston dining forever.

With that bit of history under your belt, you're ready to fully appreciate today's culinary riches. You can survey the newest options with our handy guide to eateries that have opened in the past six months and make plans to explore. And our review of three restaurants' wine dinners shows you how to expand your knowledge of food's best friend, wine, while enjoying a great meal at a bargain price. Finally, we quizzed 12 top chefs about the cheap eats they crave, and they happily dished their secrets. So heed the hunger that the cool weather's inspiring, and hit the town.

BRAVO FOR BRAUDE

After reading the very "on" interview with Jim Braude ("Soroff/On," Aug. 30), I got to thinking: If Boston's such a smart place, why isn't Braude more of a household name by now? He can switch gears on a dime, exhibiting a versatility that's just plain rare in the media these days. Braude has a full palette of colors and he uses them all. Toughness is a no-brainer, but when was the last time a TV or radio talk show host actually displayed tenderness toward a guest? I've seen it many times with Braude. Somebody please give this lion the den he deserves!

ON STYLE

In your Fall Fashion Preview (Sept. 13), it's obvious to your editors that men's fashion will consist of only blue jeans and having their male models looking l unkempt little boys. Suits a sophistication are not in st this season. I also want to thank the editors for showi the female models looking elegant and modeling their fashions with one hair colo This idiotic fashion "fad" o streaking one's hair with purple, green, blue and aqu a nuisance and makes a woman look abs lutely ridiculous. I wish it would run its course quickly.

THE WORD

EDITED BY IOLYON HELTERMAN

Basic French

If you're in the mood for fennel-dusted squab served with something-you've-never-heard-of plus a radish-water chaser, you can find restaurants far more committed to such culinary adventurism than Bouchée, a new French brasserie on Newbury. And that suits chef Tim Partridge just fine: "I don't want this to be a Radius or a Clio or a No. 9 Park," he says. "Don't get me wrong—I love those places. I just want the food at Bouchée to be more approachable." Opened by the Back Bay Restaurant Group (the approachable-food folks behind Abe & Louie's and Papa Razzi), Bouchée has a clear mandate: familiar comfort food served in a relaxed atmosphere. In other words, more like a real Parisian brasserie—minus an organ meat dish or two—and less like the usual overwrought American translations that equate French food with eatin' fancy. "It's not about what I wanted the menu to be; it's what the guests wanted it to be," Partridge says.

What customers wanted, apparently, is a hit parade of the French standards for which Americans have long harbored affection, especially the dish that started the torrid affair in the first place: pommes frites (French for "french fries"). There's moules frites (mussels and fries, $18), chicken frites (roast chicken and fries, $22), steak frites (sirloin and fries, $22), even hamburger frites ($13)—and for $4 you can get a plate of frites on the side. Frites-free starters include a warm olive plate ($5), duck confit ($13) and macaroni and cheese with smoked ham ($8), topped with parmesan breadcrumbs. (Any menu that features mac 'n' cheese under the heading "Hors d'oeuvres" is clearly committed to comfort food, in our book.) Entrees continue the comfort trend with classics like coq au vin (wine-braised chicken, $19), as well as roasted monkfish with lentils and cauliflower ($26), a signature dish that Partridge imported from his now-shuttered South End bistro, Perdix (and that once glossed the pages of Bon Appétit). To promote the brasserie vibe, Partidge offers several dishes meant for sharing, including the Prime Rib-Eye Steak for Two ($58), served bone-in with asparagus and truffled frites, and a Grand Plateau ($99) of raw-bar favorites. The full bar and the reasonably priced bottles of wine (all but a handful of which hail from France) certainly don't hinder the cause.

That relaxed, convivial vibe is conveyed by the décor as well, with leather-backed chairs and banquettes, mosaic tiles and sprawling mirrors absolutely everywhere. Located in the two-story space that once housed Café DuBarry, Bouchée looks nothing like its predecessor, thanks to a full-on gut renovation that included cutting out an enormous rectangular hole in the middle of the 120-seat upstairs dining room to facilitate spying on fellow diners (up to 60) downstairs. But the biggest change may be the 40-seat outdoor patio, situated in prime people-watching proximity along Newbury Street—a swath of real estate that Partridge predicts will attract walk-in diners a-plenty. "I know we'll do a lot of business because we're right here," Partridge says. "But then we'll do even more business because we're good." 159 Newbury St., Boston (617-450-4343). www.bouchee.com. —JH

Run for the Borders... As if Guess, Victoria's Secret and the newly arrived Filene's Basement weren't reasons enough to blow an entire paycheck at the Newbry building in the Back Bay, a Borders Books is slated to join the club later this fall. The two-level store will feature a whopping 24,046 square feet of space, stocked to the gills with books, music, movies and more, as well as lots of comfortable seating, Internet access, a Seattle's Best Coffee café, and a Paperchase shop filled with notebooks, journals, stationery, wrapping paper, greeting cards and gifts by the U.K.-based company. The store opens for business mid-November, but the grand-opening festivities take place Dec. 8, 9 and 10, with a slew of readings, lectures, children's events and book signings by local authors. 501 Boylston St., Boston. www.bordersstores.com.

Cooking With Gas... For those in the party-planning biz, the crack staff at Gordon's Fine Wines & Liquors has long been a secret ace-in-the-hole, given the staff's expertise in (and sage advice about) all things culinary. Now, with a new state-of-the-art kitchen and classroom, they're getting into the game of showing amateur home cooks how to throw the perfect dinner party. The 1,300-square-foot space—an extension of the Waltham retail store—is equipped with Bosch cooking appliances, plasma TVs, cook-top cameras and other tools for teaching classes to rookie cooks and experienced gourmands alike. Classes explore wine tasting and buying strategies, as well as hands-on cooking seminars on topics that include global foods, healthful cooking options, soups, stews and Thanksgiving sides, to name a few. Clothes Encounters

Most Boston fashionistas are familiar with Gretchen Monahan's story—local girl hits F.I.T. in NYC, then returns for cosmetology school and eventually opens salons and shops that serve Bostonians craving divine city style. She's become Beantown's go-to gal for tips on living the luxe life, and built a local empire that has primed her for national fame.

In addition to delivering trend reports on "Gretta's Got It" on Channel 7 News, you can now watch Monahan on The Rachael Ray Show, which premiered last week on CBS 4 in Boston. While Ray is the master of quick meals—and a quick study when it comes to interviewing celebrities, including Oprah (who produces the show)—she turns to Monahan for the girly stuff, like fashion advice and beauty tips. Tune in Sept. 28 for her debut segment, "Closet Confessions," in wh she advises women with woefully outdated wa robes. Monahan chooses what she describes as " best of the worst" to deliver a much-needed mod look. Other upcoming segments include how throw an at-home spa party; how to save money fabulous clothing; and how to shave five minutes your morning routine.

Monahan tells us the show allows her to apply philosophy of "instant style" to real women ev where. If you haven't been able to catch her in to perhaps you can connect on TV. The show's pro ers are looking for the worst piece of clothing in closet. This may just be your opportunity.

Flour Power

Chang's in the Channel... Joanne Chang says the biggest customer complaint she gets at Flour, her legendary South End bakery, is about the 20-seat dining area's tight quarters. Well, the eternally squeezed should take comfort in Chang's newly unveiled plans to open a second Flour location, in Fort Point Channel, this December. Same concept, same menu (pastries, tarts, cakes, sandwiches and more), but with seating for at least 30 patrons. Chang says she couldn't be happier setting up shop in this up-and-coming Southie enclave. "I've really gotten swept up with the whole area," she says. "It reminds me very much of what Washington Street was like years ago."

Bye-Bye, Bomboa... Looking to extend their stronghold on the Stanhope Street dining scene, Greg Den Herder and Igor Blatnik—co-owners of 33 Restaurant—recently announced their acquisition of neighboring Back Bay eatery Bomboa. Plans are afoot to introduce a new concept to the space early next year; until then, current chef Freddy Bonilla will continue to serve up his signature French-Latin cuisine, though 33's Anthony Dawodu will oversee the kitchens at both locations. Dinner is served Mon.-Sat., 5 pm-12 am. 35 Stanhope St., Boston (617-236-6363). www.bomboaboston.com.

Allston lost a staple of its local boozing scene when the Kinvara Pub closed its doors earlier this summer, but thirsty Allstonians didn't have to wait long for a replacement. In late August, the Draft Bar and Grille opened in the very same space. The bar is cheap-eats (and cheap-drinks) central, with 17 beers on tap (including $2 Miller Lites), $3 burgers and sandwiches at lunch, and 25-cent wings on Sunday and Monday nights, when football is playing on all four 50-inch plasma screens. The Draft also offers free Wi-Fi access and an outdoor patio for smokers, and plans are in the works to host live music and DJs on the weekends. 34 Harvard Ave ston (617-783-9400).

PLUTO, UNCENSORED

Our most distant former planet gets up close and personal in a shocking new tell-all.

Ghostwriting is a lucrative business. This makes sense, because most of the people with fascinating life stories to tell—Paris Hilton, Nick Lachey, Rush Limbaugh—are, in fact, illiterate. Very seldom is anyone blessed with both an interesting life and the ability to string together a sentence in English without sounding like a third-grader from Ukraine. That's where people like me come in. I help stars tell their stories, and my latest client is the biggest star of them all—or rather, the smallest planet. That's right: Love him or hate him, Pluto is the most controversial figure in our solar system. The following is an excerpt from his red-hot upcoming autobiography, Pluto: Out of Orbit and Out of Control.

Chapter 1: Planet Hollywood

I was a planet from 1930 to 2006. Now I'm not. Where's the job security these days? I'll say it: Astronomers are a bunch of fickle bitches. One day they think your frickin' moons might be planets, the next day you're not even a planet yourself. [Neutron star specialist] Jocelyn Bell Burnell can bite me. I'm not a planet? I've got a few million science-fair dioramas that say otherwise.

Think about the marketing implications, here. Saturn and Mercury—those are real fancy cars, if you're 83 years old. Jupiter is a retirement community in Florida. Mars is a candy bar. Uranus—enough said. But Pluto? Pluto is only the most beloved Disney character in the world, maybe after the mouse. You know what else I am? PLUTOnium. Give the Middle East a few more years to get their hands on that, and we'll see who's not a planet.

Lately people have been saying that I'm supposed to feel better because UB313 isn't a planet, either, and he's even bigger than I am. Look, I don't care how big UB313 is: You can't be a planet when you don't even have a name. Maybe UB313 should go listen to some UB40, because I'm sick of his red, red whining.

You know what makes me laugh? The fact that NASA sent out a spacecraft to study me earlier this year. What a joke. It'd be a real shame if my orbit changed just enough so that when it got here it crashed into my surface at 1,000 miles per hour. Not that I hold NASA completely responsible for the international conference of ass-tronomers who revoked my planet card. But obviously, NASA thought I was a planet when they sent out that probe, so why didn't they throw their weight around? Maybe there was a Swiss guy who was like, "Pluto shouldn't be a planet," and NASA could've been "Why don't you talk about something know, Swissy, like chocolate or bank counts, and leave the space matters country that plays golf on the damn mo Right on, that would've been awesome. the way, if you ever meet an astronome out of your way to refer to him as an trologer. That drives them up the wall.)

I think that when you get down t I'm the most popular planet—yeah, calling myself a planet, and if you d like it you can chomp my moon—bec I have that vulnerability thing going small and I live on the fringes of the m stream, yet I get mad tail, sort of like Green. On that front, let me just get out there, so that sleazy tabloids like Sc can stop speculating: Yes, Neptune a crossed orbits in 1999. That's been p well publicized. But what you don't kn that we've been on-again, off-again s Galileo was wearing goat britches or w ever people wore for diapers back th first picked her up with the line, "You see me with the naked eye, but I'd li see you naked." Talk about the Big Ba you have no idea.

I've definitely been around the gal little bit, but I've been safe about it. T was just that one time I thought I kn up Saturn and had a comet, but it tu out to be Halley's.

The women, the fame, the attentio was all great, but I'm not saying I'm fect. Mistakes were made. Eddie Mu would agree that Pluto Nash didn't he ther of our careers. Times change, a you don't change with them, the nex eration doesn't even know you exist kids born this millennium think of m planet? All I know is, if the presence trogen-breathing space monkeys is th ference between a planet and a planet, then don't throw away dioramas just yet. IB

THE COLLINS CARD

BLOOD IS THICKER THAN GATORADE

Sox lose; perspective gained.

It's hard to imagine someone who does what I do, growing up where I grew up, not caring about the Red Sox' freefall this summer. Indeed, under normal circumstances, depression would have set in by now. So would anger. Larry Lucchino, Theo Epstein, Terry Francona and Josh Beckett would have been getting an earful from me.

But there are times when outside events take over your life, and nothing else—not your career, not even the team you love—matters. The day the world discovered that the Red Sox' 22-year-old pitcher, Jon Lester, had lymphoma, I was oblivious to the news. Because my 70-year-old dad, Arthur L. Collins II, had just learned of his own cancer.

When I heard about Lester, I felt for him; no one should have to go through what he's going through now. And having gotten to know him a little bit during his brief time with the big club, there's nothing not to like about him: He's bright, hardworking and respectful, and in his rapid ascent to the big leagues, he's already shown a maturity beyond his 22 years of age. And at that age, he should be physically up to the fight, which could last years.

My dad's deal is different. It's beyond description to watch someone who helped mold the man you are today in a fight for his life. It knocks all your energy out of you; it kills your spirit. That's the only way I can explain what happens when you see the man who once sat at the head of your dinner table being destroyed by a voracious disease.

Spending as much time in the hospital as I have over the past month, there's been much opportunity for reflection. And as crazy as it may sound, the thing that kept echoing in my head was Charles Barkley's infamous quote that he's not your kid's role model.

When he said that, I was livid. You're a role model, I thought. Quit shirking your responsibility and deal with it.

Well, I was wrong. Sir Charles, the mouth of the South, was right after all.

Because as I sat in my father's hospital room, I finally realized that the athletes I worshiped as a kid were nothing more than entertainers. I may have wanted to hit like Fred Lynn or Jim Rice, but hitting a ball isn't what's important in life. My true role model was always right in front of me. From playing baseball in the side yard to the first day of Little League, I often seemed to be walking by his side, headed to a field; and while he coached me in a few sports, in reality he was always my coach.

I wouldn't be in this line of work hadn't been for my dad's own passion sports. He knew baseball, loved game—even though it hadn't always b good to him. He played at the time w professional baseball was starting to i grate, but it was a slow movement nati ally, and even slower here in Boston.

My dad would tell me of the count tryouts he'd had over at Fenway P when he was playing for the Colored ants, a team of black players in Boston Park League. He was a star w the Giants, but because of the times never had that glorious opportunity. A although he always watched the games on TV or listened on the radio claimed that he wasn't a fan. I can un stand why not.

But as good as he was on the field showed equal mastery of his studies. dominated the books at one of the n competitive public high schools in Ar ica, Boston Latin School, and from the was on to Boston College, where he c peted in three sports on his way to bec ing an engineer. Suffice it to say, he d fit the mold of "dumb jock."

But my dad's real accomplishments c at our home in Peabody. He and my m sent three kids to college. Now my siste doctor, my brother followed Dad's foot and became an engineer in the televi business, and I'm the luckiest guy in world—doing what I love, every mome the day.

Thanks, Dad. Thanks for making realize the Red Sox' collapse, when said and done, is meaningless. And th for reminding me that you are the man always will be in my book. iB

Legends of Boston

Merriment and momentous occasions at the real Ritz Bar.

Not many legendary bars or restaurants in Boston still operate under the same name and at the same location as they did years ago. In 1927, the Wyner family opened the Ritz-Carlton and ran it with the highest standards of any hotel in America. Legend says that Ed Wyner was approached by the FBI at one point, and told that the hotel was being frequented by the Mafia. "Impossible," he's reputed to have said. "I personally vet every guest at the Ritz." And it was true. Katharine Hepburn was the only woman wearing slacks ever allowed into the hotel. Mr. Wyner wouldn't admit Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor because he disapproved of their extramarital conduct. Ed's wife, Helen, brought in special signature touches, like the blue glass chandeliers and the matching blue glass water goblets. The Ritz roof was the glitziest destination in town for dinner and dancing, until the Wyners turned the space into a rooftop playground for their children.

I once pulled up to the Ritz in a borrowed Mercedes sedan carrying seven drunken people, all of whom were chanting, "The Ritz Bar, the Ritz Bar." We were coming from an engagement party. But it was in the days when several drinks meant that when the party was over, it somehow wasn't enough. I guess that hasn't changed. We came careening into the front entrance on Arlington Street. All the clowns piled out. "Luggage, sir?" asked the bellman.

"In the trunk," I said, handing him the keys. He opened the trunk and out jumped our friend Big Bill, who had curled up inside, because, as he sensibly said, "There was no room in the car." Bill brushed himself off, straightened his tie, looked at the passersby and said, "My good man, entrances are everything." There were no night clubs, no dance clubs in town at the time. The Ritz Bar was the place. For many Bostonians, the bar kicked off a celebration: a birthday, an anniversary, a meeting with someone you were excited to see—or someone you needed to impress.

"I took my eventual father-in-law to the bar for a drink," a friend told me, "to tell him why I wasn't ready to be married. After two martinis he looked at me and said, 'Set the date you son of a bitch; enough of this pussyfooting around.' Those were the days when fathers were fathers. I set the date." At the Ritz Bar you were made to feel, for those brief shining moments, as if you were in the lap of luxury. Everyone I spoke to about the bar had a special memory. Another friend, quite fancy, had a mee with the stepfather of the woman wanted to marry. The stepfather wante tell my friend to, as the English say, " off," that he was not good enough for stepdaughter. My friend chose the Ritz and got there early for a corner seat c manding a full view of the room. He arranged for a few friends to be scatte around the bar. The stepfather came in, not shake hands, ordered an "extra-dry G son, straight up."

"The definition of a Gibson is ex dry," my friend said.

"Look," said the stepfather, "I don't word games. It's simple. I don't think y provide the life that Marlo needs and serves." That's when my friend's bud started to show up at the table, praising h ignoring the stepfather, saying things l "I'll be in to sign the papers tomorrow. C wait to get started." By the end of t drinks, the stepfather said, "Jesus, this is your office. Could I be wrong about you

"So I married her," my friend said. " Ritz Bar was the closest thing to show b Boston that I could imagine. You just l looking at people and what they were w ing, and wondering about the lives they

RACHAEL RAY

This month, iconic Food Network host, bestselling cookbook author and editor-in-chief of her own lifestyle magazine Rachael launched an eponymous syndicated talk show, which airs locally on CBS 4, weekdays at 10 am. Ray was born on Cape Cod, where family was in the restaurant business until relocating to upstate New York. Throughout her childhood, she worked in the f industry in every capacity imaginable. In her early 20s she moved to New York City, where she worked first at the candy counter at Macy's, and later as manager of the fresh foods department. Two years later, she helped open the prestigious gourmet shop Agata and Valentina, where she was the manager and buyer. She moved back to upstate New York to be a manager at the Sagamore Resort on Lake George, and was then recruited by a gourmet market in Albany to be their buyer and chef. During the holiday season, she began a series of cooking classes, including "30-Minute Mediterranean Meals." It proved so popular that the local CBS affiliate asked her to do a weekly "30-Minute Meals" segment on the evening news. She was nominated for two regional Emmys her first year, and a companion cookbook sold 10,000 copies. Her television work eventually landed her on the Food Network, hosting such shows as Tasty Travels, $40 a Day, Inside Dish and, of course, 30-Minute Meals, which earned two daytime Emmy nominations in 2006. Ray has also authored a bestselling series of cookbooks with an emphasis on quick and easy cooking, and launched the successful magazine Every Day With Rachael Ray. With the addition of her new television show (featuring regular appearances by local style maven Gretchen Monahan), Ray rounds out her media empire. She lives with her husband, John, and her beloved pit bull, IsaBoo, in New York City and the Adirondacks.

Jonathan Soroff: Do you consider yourself a chef?

Rachael Ray: I'm not a chef. I don't have any pedigree papers. I'm a mutt from the pound, so I'm definitely a cook.

JS: What separates your talk show from all the other chatter out there?

RR: How many other talk shows bring a pit bull into the kitchen? She's my taste-tester. But on a serious note, the amount of viewer participation is, I think, unique.

JS: Who'd win a mud-wrestling match: you, Megan Mullally or Ellen DeGeneres?

RR: Definitely me. I'm low to the ground and Sicilian.

JS: Your first week on the air, you jumped out of an airplane. What do you do for an encore?

RR: I'm waiting for someone to send me a challenge.

JS: So you're up for doing wacky stunts?

RR: Well, I am, in fact, a bobblehead, so not so much on the wacky but definitely the stunts. Just nothing too creepy.

JS: One thing you'd never do to boost your ratings?

RR: Eat mayonnaise. I hate the stuff.

JS: How about the kitchen tool you can't live without?

RR: A sharp knife. What else would I cut my fingers off with?

JS: Worst cooking injury?

RR: Cutting the aforementioned fingers off, and then having them Krazy Glued back on and moving on with the show. That's absolutely true.

JS: How about worst kitchen disaster?

RR: Probably setting my hair on fire when my crew gave me a birthday cake and I leaned in to blow out the candles. I did a Michael Jackson on both sides of the head and got a singe trim.

JS: Your family owned restaurants. Worst job you ever had?

RR: By far, DMO: dish machine operator. The most humiliating thing you can do to scar a teenager is to put them in a 130-degree kitchen and let them sweat and really develop those zits and then send them out into a dining room filled with their peers and schoolmates enjoying ice cream on a hot summer day.

JS: Is there a silver bullet for fixing something you effed up in the kitchen?

RR: Call for take-out, have another glass of wine and get over it.

JS: How do you keep your girlish figure?

RR: I don't. I buy pants that stretch, because I love to eat and you always need room for a high-fat day.

JS: Isn't it bull that French women don't get fat?

RR: I'm sure there must be some, but I think they hide them away in cellars and let them out only at night to graze in the fields. [Laughs.]

JS: Three fantasy dinner guests?

"I BUY PANTS THAT STRETCH, BECAUSE I LOVE TO EAT AND YOU ALWAYS NEED ROOM FOR A HIGH-FAT DAY."

RR: Jon Stewart and his two pit bulls.

JS: Biggest "Wow!" dish you can prepare in 30 minutes?

RR: Probably the individual beef Wellingtons. That's my best fake-out for the holiday "Ta-das."

JS: Do you cook at home?

RR: Of course. [Laughs.] You think they just hand these jobs to people who don't like to cook? I enjoy cooking and eating at home. I do both.

JS: Does your husband cook for you?

RR: My husband cooks with me, which is even sexier.

JS: Best seduction recipe?

RR: You won't be single for long: vodka cream pasta. But for my husband, carbonara. It's his favorite meal.

JS: Is Gretchen Monahan the most stylish woman alive?

RR: That I know, yes. I'm sure she has competition, but they're not hanging out with the likes of me. She's not only stylish, but brave enough to deal with me. We call her G, 'cause she's sooo money.

JS: Best cook you know?

RR: My mama, 'cause mama didn't raise no fool. Even if it wasn't true, which it is, she's Sicilian, so I'd still say it was her.

JS: Could you kick Martha Stewart's ass?

RR: I wouldn't try. I'm slightly frightened. She has the advantage in every aspect of domesticity, and besides, I wouldn't want her comin' at me with garden shears or a melon baller. I find her incredibly intimidating in every way. I've never met her. I'm sure she's extremely lovely. But I find myself so grossly inadequate in every area she's mastered. So I'll stay away from that throwdown.

JS: You're a big Sox fan…

RR: A huge one, and might I remind Bostonians that I threw out the first pitch not like the wussy presidents or stars who stand halfway to the plate. I threw from the mound, over the plate, to Jason Varitek, thank you very much.

JS: So what would you serve Big Papi on game day?

RR: I've seen the inside of his fridge. been in [my] magazine. He loves icy beer. He loves all kinds of shellfish, lots of tropical fruits and vegetables.

JS: Is Julia Child your patron saint?

RR: One of 'em. I hope she's partying in heaven, making 'em cut loose a littl because that's what I always loved a her. She had fistfuls of salt and big gl of wine. A girl after my own heart.

JS: Got a favorite TV chef, besides yours

RR: I have a special place for Mario. my big bundle of love.

JS: One thing everyone should know abo going to the supermarket?

RR: Well, they say you should neve when you're hungry, but I say the opp When you go hungry, what you really to eat jumps right out at you.

The setting and food are posh, but the vibe is decidedly relaxed at L'Espalier's Wine Mondays.

One Decanted Evening

Wine dinners roll education and fun into one.

It's a hard fact of the fast life we urbanites lead: We have to multitask just to keep up. That goes for play as well as work. Take dining: Going out for a change of scenery and a casual bite is for amateurs. If you want to be the best diner you can be—a connoisseur of cuisine and conviviality alike—consider attending weekly wine dinners, where you can expand your palate, your mind and your Rolodex in one fell swoop.

OK, we're exaggerating, at least in part. At their best, the themed wine-dinner series at many local restaurants really are multipurpose. They're get-togethers; they're lessons in everything from tasting and pairing to culinary history and viticulture; obviously they're multicourse feasts. And they're usually bargains to boot—after all, the organizers themselves have parallel motives: to fill seats on slower weeknights while giving new customers an incentive to visit. But you needn't feel compelled to engage yourself on every level at once. If you'd just as soon linger quietly over a nice meal as gain insight from the sommelier, glean tips from the chef and get buddy-buddy with your tablemates, be our guest. Or rather, be theirs. Here's an inside look at a few of our favorites.

The Soirée: Wine Mondays at L'Espalier

Whether you want to or not, you'll learn something about L'Espalier just by entering its front room on any given Wine Monday—namely that the city's foremost destination for formal dining is unexpectedly well-equipped to help patrons feel right at home. Sure, grey-haired Brahmins in eveningwear dot the crowd, but so do clusters of singles fresh from the office. And sure, the servers circulating with bread baskets and champagne cocktails are as neat, discreet and comme il faut as ever. But when your host, beverage director Erik Johnson, takes the floor in all his rumpled affability, you'll know you can afford to relax, literally. The per-person tab for the four-course tasting is roughly half that of the average meal here.

Consider "Chillin' & Grillin'," a recent overview of barbecue-ready wines that makes good on Johnson's prefatory dismissal of "snotty" wine tastings: "I prefer the term 'wine party'—everyone needs to make lots of noise and have fun." With surprisingly little ado, the meal proceeds at an efficient—though hardly hurried—clip, punctuated by Johnson's brief, snappy monologues. Indeed, smart sound bites pepper each course; of the 2005 Saint-Peyre Picpoul-de-Pinet accompanying an appetizer of grilled shrimp and watermelon over corn purée, Johnson notes, "The name means 'lip-stinger' because it's very high in acidity; there's your grapefruit with a little nuttiness.... The bright, zippy flavor complements the smoky sweetness [of the dish]." Of a 2005 Houchart rosé paired with grilled bluefish over wild rice, he comments, "A good rosé should have some elements of white and some of red. This one is like Goldilocks, right smack dab in the middle." And when explaining that, despite the bad rap "pink wine" gets, he isn't "gonna beat on white zin, because that was the first wine I loved in college," he prompts a young guy in a tie to crack, "At least it didn't come from a box"; from across the room, a woman retorts, "Well, actually..."

In short, the vibe's as casual and comfortable as it could possibly get at Frank McClelland's palace of posh, and continues through the remaining courses. The third consists of a somewhat fatty but nicely sage-scented grilled pork loin over the richest, creamiest polenta ever (all well-matched to a 2004 Domaine La Montgnette Côtes du Rhône), and the fourth a cheese plate containing sizable chunks of Ragusano and a superb aged Gouda, paired with a 2002 Mauritson Zinfandel. An optional dessert course costs an extra $12—a fee that may rub some guests the wrong way, at least until they realize they're ultimately getting rubbed right anyway: A complimentary tray of lovely handcrafted sweets arrives with the check, and bags of macaroons serve as parting gifts.

The bottom wine-and-dine line: If you're not a guidance-hungry novice but a savvy foodie just looking for a change of pace, Wine Mondays are for you.

More Wining and Dining

So now you know what to expect; all that's left is to check schedules and reserve seats. Perhaps the regular tastings at UpStairs on the Square (91 Winthrop St., Cambridge, 617-864-1933, www.upstairsonthesquare.com)—conducted by a passionate young buck of a wine director, Matt Reiser, in the wild environs of either the Zebra Room or the Jewel Box—will prove just your speed. Or maybe you're up for a three-course Epicurean Evening, held Tuesdays at Aujourd'hui (Four Seasons Hotel, 200 Boylston St., 617-351-2037, www.aujourdhui.com)—where sommelier Brick Loomis encourages note-taking and leads guests in themed tastings. 33 Restaurant & Lounge's (33 Stanhope St., 617-572-3311) Hot off the Vine series varies its format—every Wednesday, alternating quick, casual tastings with structured classes featuring elaborate dinners. Both Les Zygomates (129 South St., 617-542-5108, www.winebar.com) and Sel de la Terre (255 State St., 617-720-1300) organize multicourse tastings weekly; Meritage (Boston Harbor Hotel, 70 Rowes Wharf, 617-439-3995) and Radius (8 High St., 617-426-1234) host occasional events; as does Tremont 647 (647 Tremont St., 617-266-4600): Its annual tequila dinner is famous. It's your call—literally.

The Seminar: Class in a Glass at Piattini

By contrast, as the name suggests, Class in a Glass—held Monday nights at Piattini's Columbus Avenue outpost—is a rather more hands-on, intensive affair. As such, this series of four-course wine dinners is apt to display a few minor quirks—along with a whole lot of heart.

"Zinfully Delicious"—the theme on the night we visited—for instance, takes place in Piattini's narrow wedge of a back room, around a long communal table set with packets of tasting notes. As the mostly 20-something couples in attendance take their seats around it (a word to the small of bladder: opt for a chair, not the banquette), our host—not an in-house sommelier but United Liquor representative Andrew Crookes, clad in suit and tie—kicks off his in-depth introductory lecture on the featured varietal by confessing, "Zinfandel's really rich, generally. You can drink too much of it, so it's kind of a gamble for a wine dinner." Never mind whether the implication that we're all about to get toasted actually registers as a warning or a promise; for better or worse, we're toasted we definitely are by the end of the three-hour-plus banquet.

But if there's perhaps a little too much downtime between some courses, it's filled enthusiastically and generously by host and staff alike. Crookes, for his part, holds forth tirelessly but gracefully, often prefacing his comments and suggestions with tact: "Of course you're all familiar with..." (Being a bit of a sloppy Sally myself, I for one will take reminders to swirl my wineglass in "little tight circles the size of a quarter" wherever I can get them.) He dishes on the industry and imparts personal advice—for instance, "Zinfandel doesn't age well; I wouldn't drink zin from 2001"—as guests ask questions that gradually reveal their inner students: Here's the teacher's pet, there's the class clown. And all the while, our servers not only keep the baskets of focaccia coming but even provide seconds on some pours.

And the food they eventually bring? Considering Crookes confronted, in his words, "the biggest challenge of my life to try to get Asian food and barbecue out of an Italian kitchen, it's remarkably good. Though an appetizer of sesame chicken seems a bit heavy-handed, what follows is spot-on, from lusty beef-and-pork-stuffed agnolotti over endive purée to just-right chocolate cake. But the real hit is an ample plate of pork ribs, whose succulence, bright sauce and unusual side—a sort of mashed-potato cake topped with snappy chick pea salad—give barbecue a nifty Italian makeover. By evening's end, one waitress, setting down complimentary nightcaps of Dom Pérignon with a clunk—first herself apologizing: "I'm getting drunk." What in the dining room would seem unprofessional is an endearing hoot at our private party.

The bottom wine-and-dine line: Eager for a thoroughgoing education in good life? Take Class in a Glass.

The Seasonal Spread: The Harvest Review at Harvest

If L'Espalier and Piattini occupy two ends of the instructional spectrum, Harvest hits the happy medium. Creating their four-course menu around a single ingredient rather than a wine, the chefs bring in a guest expert—a farmer, forager or fisherman, say—to cohost each session of the Harvest Review along with wine director Jason Irving. The pair team-teach their subject at the event's onset, then make the rounds to answer questions as the meal proceeds uninterrupted in the restaurant's function room.

Local, sustainable agriculture being every good Cantabrigian's green fancy, it's no wonder the monthly series consistently sells out. At the tomato-themed "I Heard It Through the Vine," a mixed-age crowd—which even included a family or two—gathers around the reserved tables to learn first about the courses to come, then about the heirloom crops of Nesenkeag Farms' Jim Ruuttila. If his name sounds like a mouthful, so are the fruits of his labors, indeed, while part of the fun of the other dinners lies in judging how well the wines fare with each pairing, here exploring the versatility of the tomato is a treat in itself—whether it's sliced with peaches, then capped with arugula-sylvetta, herbed crumbs and black-olive vinaigrette; added to a scallop-topped fondue that pops with rich flavor (a 2003 Jean-Luc Colombo Viognier shone in tandem); stuffed with couscous alongside lamb; or—best of all—dried and candied as a garnish for tomato-watermelon sorbet, which is in turn accompanied by a moist, mellow olive oil cakelet. One caveat: Portions here are sized for tasting; the hunger-prone will want to ask for a bread basket (one of greater Boston's best, after all). Meanwhile, the soft-spoken may want to mike up—the room can get surprisingly loud.

The bottom wine-and-dine line: At once a tad more formal and more homegrown than the others, the Harvest Review would make for a special night on the town with visiting foodies.

LOOK BACK IN HUNGER

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

e upon a time, when our city was a culinary wasteland, ursday—the customary maids' day off—was the night when ston's old-money elite ventured out from their Beacon Hill wnhouses to dine, either at a private club or at an appropri-ly proper (albeit stodgy) restaurant. These days, Thursday is e busiest night of the week at the Capital Grille on Newbury eet, and Boston boasts a thriving dining scene that runs the nut from chef-run neighborhood bistros and swanky lounges refined destination restaurants that draw attention from far tside our once-parochial town.

It's not as if Boston fell asleep, then suddenly woke up to find it-f overrun by steakhouses, condominiums and luxury hotels, cked with nouveau riche entrepreneurs, a newly gastronomically ven demographic, and visitors whose itineraries included three als a day at local eateries. Change didn't happen overnight, and e forces that exerted change ranged from home-grown economic ues to national sociological trends. Think of it as a kind of gastro-mic gestalt: Just as the whole is more than the sum of its parts, it's tually impossible to give full credit to all the parts, and all the play-, who've made Boston dining what it is today.

Even when every dish at a buffet is enticing, you have to make oices. So we've selected 10 topics, or turning points, that offer a fferent kind of insight into what's currently on our collective ste. And we apologize in advance for inevitable oversights. (Mai-n Robert, the North End, the Big Dig, Anthony's Pier Four, Ja-ica Plain are among the topics not discussed here.)

Caveats aside, if you'd like to savor a tasty bit of insight, a look ck at the events that shaped the dining scene of today, a memory re and a glimpse there, pull up a chair and check out the menu.

1. Voters eliminate rent control in Boston and Cambridge.

hen Icarus opened in the South End in 1978, the neighborhood was ar cry from today's elegant brownstone-lined streets and plethora of ic shops and stylish eateries. Owner/chef Chris Douglass says Icarus' ginal location near the Pine Street Inn, and in the midst of the era de-institutionalization, meant that he'd have to ask a few street peo-("back then we called them bums") to kindly move from their sleep-g spot in the doorway so that he could enter his restaurant.

"For lack of a better term, it was sort of a gay ghetto.... Rents were af-dable, and you could buy a townhouse for $30,000, $40,000—just for back taxes," says Douglass. Icarus' original two owners, Tom Hall and n Bellott, "opened with a single blackboard menu, as a neighborhood ce, and Tom cooked from a Julia Child cookbook in an acrylic cook-ok holder," he remembers. Since then, as the South End has evolved o a desirable neighborhood, Icarus has evolved into a fine-dining desti-ion, and has been joined by others. As real estate values and rents rise, South End's boundaries continue to expand, extending down Wash-ton Street and Harrison Ave. toward Roxbury.

Paul O'Connell, who moved into Chez Henri outside Harvard Square ile rent control was moving out, saw the changes in Cambridge. "The ghborhood was gentrified, more upscale," he says, noting the phasing of "the neighborhood eccentrics, like the old-school Yankee lady who'd ne in on a 90-degree day in the summer in a wool skirt, and with her wig crooked."

n their place were the newly monied high-tech entrepreneurs, stockbro-s, money managers and smart (or lucky) investors. Mostly young and rich ond their expectations, they reveled in their ability to dine out every ht, to buy the highest-priced bottle on the wine list, to lavish hospitality their friends and business associates. The South End became a magnet for unprecedented variety of restaurants, including Hamersley's Bistro and uitaine. Not every spot met with success, but when one place closed, an-er quickly opened in the same venue. Enlarging the South End restaurant ne geographically and more recently are Caffè Umbra, Union, Stella, the cher Shop, B&G Oysters and Toro.

2. Jasper White pan-roasts a lobster.

irty years ago in Boston, "fine dining" meant "French dining," says Jasper hite, "even if it was phony. Menus were printed in French and English; I call t the Jackie O. effect. At the end of the Jackie O. years, we opened Seasons 1982] with an all-American wine list."

Gone were the familiar "Continental" dishes such as duck à l'orange, steak Diane and coq au vin. White focused his considerable repertoire of classical cooking techniques on all-American raw ingredients: thus, the advent of the pan-roasted lobster, as complexly flavorful as any fancy-pants European dinner. White's menu at Seasons in the Bostonian Hotel included "lobster sausage, Asian duck, some sushi, in 1981. Today, it'd look like a neighborhood café menu, but back then it was quite bold." Also, quite popular: "We had a four-month waiting list for dinner on weekends," he says.

Something was in the air (perhaps the smell of money, given the robust economy) in the early '80s, according to White. "Our timing was excellent. We [White and Lydia Shire] were able to attract great talent: Gordon Hamersley, Jody Adams, Tony Ambrose, Susan Regis" all did stints in Seasons' kitchen. When White opened his own restaurant, Jasper's, in 1983, he says, it was another key "artistic moment" in culinary history: The same year, "Wolfgang Puck opened Spago, Jeremiah Tower opened Stars, Larry Forgione opened An American Place."

However, says White, "In retrospect, it wasn't about 'new American food.' It was opening the doors to what fine dining is today." And opening people's minds, as well as their wallets.

3. Grill 23 rethinks steakhouse fare.

Long ago, when Bostonians craved red meat, their choices were pretty much limited to the Hilltop Steak House (up Route 1 in Saugus), with its long lines and steer statuary, or the Valle's steakhouse chain. In 1983, a new carnivorous era dawned with the opening of Grill 23 & Bar in the Back Bay. Instead of "baked, French fries, or rice pilaf?" the first big, upscale steakhouse to open in Boston made a splash with its elegant revamping of the historic Salada Tea Building and its four-star review in the Boston Globe.

"For a steakhouse to get four stars was a big deal," says Tim Lynch, partner and former chief operating officer of the restaurant. Moreover, Grill 23 epitomized then-mayor Kevin White's exhortation to develop Boston into a "world-class city"; Lynch chuckles as he recalls "customers coming in and telling me, 'This is a world-class restaurant.'"

Initially a concept restaurant with a standard, accessible steakhouse menu, Grill 23's hiring of chef Robert Fathman in the early '90s "helped enhance [its] culinary credibility," says Lynch. Grill 23's status as an independent restaurant, as well as its heavily promoted daily nonsteak specials, help distinguish it still from the slew of steakhouse chains that came to town: Morton's, Smith & Wollensky, the Palm, Capital Grille, Abe & Louie's, Plaza III, Fleming's and Ruth's Chris.

4. Biba's menu gets two brains.

During the prosperous '80s, Bostonians learned to enjoy spending their money. More travel to exotic locales and a corresponding curiosity about hitherto unknown areas of gastronomy created a demographic ripe for the adventurous sensibility of Lydia Shire, who opened the extravagantly, playfully luxurious Biba in 1989. No restaurant was hotter. "I paid my investors back in two years, 11 months," Shire says.

"Biba was about two people—Susie Regis and I—pushing ourselves to the maximum. We pushed the envelope a little," Shire recalls, noting with pride an early Biba menu whose notorious "offal" section boasted not just one, but two dishes featuring brains. Whimsically written menu copy—"a mushroom masquerading as a steak; skate wing with a splash of elderberry wine, roasted pumpkin butter and charred chard ribs; spritz of ice wine vinegar on clams hearth-roasted over pine needles with foaming sauce of pine nut"—reflected Shire's focus on lusty, imaginative dishes resulting from research and hard work. "Far be it from me to chop up tuna tartare and put it on a chip; that's not working hard for your customers," she says.

Today diners expect, even demand, that the restaurants they patronize provide more than a fine meal. Hard-to-find or limited-supply ingredients—for example, organic lamb from a tiny Vermont farm or genuine Kobe beef (rather than domestic Wagyu)—are an absolute must. Flavors that challenge the American palate, often garnered from chefs' worldwide travels, add a new spark to the ever-consuming interest in gastronomic adventure—witness the success of Mantra, whose original pastry chef dared to add fenugreek to sweet desserts. Authenticity counts, too: Today's diners are also today's travelers.

Beantown has come a long way from the dark ages of stodgy steak joints and uninspired Franco-American fare. But it didn't happen overnight. Here are 10 moments that changed Boston's dining scene forever.

5. Ken Oringer poses naked with a blender.

What would've been a bizarre act of epicurean exhibitionism 10 years earlier was simply a smart career move by the early 1990s, in the age of the celebrity chef. Back when Jasper White launched his culinary career, "celebrity chef" was an oxymoronic phrase. "It wasn't the American way," White says. "Chefs were drunks, on the fringes of society. Today, the business attracts lots of interesting, well-educated people."

And in 1992, the business provided in-the-raw material for a series of magazine ads spotlighting 40 famous chefs photographed with a key piece of professional equipment—a Vita-Prep blender—concealing their more personal equipment.

Products of our increasing culinary sophistication, as well as the huge American appetites for celebrity contact and consumer culture, celebrity chefs can reap huge benefits from their status, and not just from television shows and investor access. Ming Tsai's Web site markets autographed cookbooks, Ming T-shirts and caps, videos and bamboo cutting boards. Click on to Todd English's Web site, and shop for olive-wood cutting boards or the entire line of English's Home Shopping Network cookware, Tuscan dinnerware and more.

But celebrity status isn't all about glamour and easy money. "There's jealousy, that's human nature," says Todd English. "I've had my ups and downs. Everybody roots for underdogs." His own multifaceted success—as one of People magazine's "Most Beautiful People," as a television personality, as the Olives and Figs empire-builder—reminds him of a big bucket of live crabs in Chinatown: "Just as one is about to escape, the others pull him back in," he sighs.

For foodies, the celebrity chef phenomenon put a human face on their growing enthusiasm for culinary exploration. Chef-written cookbooks were snapped up by avid home cooks who'd renovated their kitchens in the style of professional kitchens, with stainless steel and status stoves. At its most extreme, the celebrity chef business was simply a way to generate revenue—for television shows, magazines, charity events—but the enduring effects are beneficial for both the industry and consumer. Diners put their trust in the chef as gastronomic guide, and dared to eat raw tuna for the first time. They learned to value—and pay for—produce from local farmers, artisanal breads and cheeses, wild-caught seafood and organic meats.

"CHEFS WERE DRUNKS, ON THE FRINGES OF SOCIETY. TODAY THE BUSINESS ATTRACTS WELL-EDUCATED PEOPLE."

6. Rialto opens in the Charles Hotel.

Before you were born, hotel dining in Boston fell into three categories: seriously formal and expensive, often reserved for special occasions—for example, the dining room at the Ritz-Carlton, Café Budapest, the Oak Room at the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel; seriously mediocre, relying on convenience of location to snare hungry hotel guests—for example, any restaurant in a Howard Johnson's or Holiday Inn, the late 57 restaurant, most every theme-based eatery; and seriously down-to-earth—the now virtually extinct, reasonably priced coffee shop, usually situated next to the lobby, where you could grab a quick muffin or sandwich.

Hotel restaurants began a transformation to full-on destination dining in fits and starts. But one of the more prominent signs of change came in 1985, when the Four Seasons opened up a restaurant with a name that didn't explicitly identify itself with the hotel—Aujourd'hui—thus blurring the line between hotel restaurant and destination restaurant. The trend really took off in 1994, when Jody Adams opened Rialto in Cambridge's Charles Hotel to four-star reviews from the Globe. Today, far more top-tier hotel restaurants—the Federalist (XV Beacon), Meritage (Boston Harbor Hotel) and Clio (Eliot Hotel), to name a few—are elegant destination venues. In fact, intense competition has forced the closure of two long-term favorites: Both the fabled dining room at the Ritz-Carlton and Julien at the Langham Hotel have been relegated to function-room status. And you can forget about the bargain breakfast at the hotel coffee shop. The real-estate value of the in-hotel space and the rise of Starbucks put the final nails in that coffin.

7. Manhattanite chefs migrate north.

Paul O'Connell of Chez Henri jokingly refers to them as "Ken Tsai and Ming Schlow," the chefs who, in the mid-to-late '90s, brought "influence from other cities," mostly New York, and whose cuisines were marked, says O'Connell, by "highly refined, smaller portions, New York–style."

In the case of Ken Oringer's Clio, which opened in June of 1997, portions at the opening night party were so small—in fact, virtually nonexistent—that guests clustered in vain at the kitchen door, and the fiasco was dubbed "the night of the great feast" by one of the bartenders. Oringer went on to win local and national acclaim, as well as the title of Best Chef/Northeast from the James Beard Foundation in 2001, and to open Toro in the South End in 2005.

Michael Schlow, who wielded his squeeze bottles of flavored oils with aplomb as he created a stir at Café Louis in 1995, went on to open Radius in January of 1999 with partner Christopher Myers, winning over Bostonians accustomed to towering food perched on mashed potatoes to a more restrained, often exquisite approach.

8. Ming Tsai opens Blue Ginger.

Not all that long ago, "ethnic" meant cheap and casual: Italian spaghetti, Chinese lunch specials, Mexican rice and beans. Today, sophisticated ethnic fare, whether 100 percent authentic or an artful combination of cultural influences, is an intrinsic pa most upscale restaurants' menus, with prices to match. Less parochial and be traveled Bostonians appreciate a broader range of flavors. An international cr of college and university students and faculty expect to satisfy their diverse c ings for dishes that taste like home. Surprisingly, Jasper White's new-Amer cuisine played a role here.

"I learned from Jasper how to take ethnic food and make it really nice," a upscale, says Chez Henri's O'Connell, who incorporates Latin influences classic French techniques into a menu that's a stylish pan-Latin amalgam o gredients—Ecuadorean, Venezuelan, Cuban, Mexican—presented with nesse that comes as a surprise to those who expected "ethnic" to mean "p ant-style." For example: rice-crusted tuna over crispy coconut rice cake Peruvian octopus salad and ahi Amarillo.

In the early 1990s, the Elephant Walk introduced diners to the subtle c plexity of upper-class Cambodian/French cuisine. In 1998, Ming Tsai's Ginger was an instant hit in the very blond suburb of Wellesley. It's price lunch, heirloom tomato gazpacho with shrimp toast and cilantro cream is and Korean BBQ pulled pork on coriander focaccia is $16. But it also en sulated the transformation of Bostonians' view of ethnic cuisine and its p in the landscape of high-end dining.

9. A chef runs to Dunkin'.

As an increasing number of restaurants compete for diners' dollars, start-up costs skyrocket, chefs who originally expected to take charg their own kitchens are reconsidering their options. For some, corporat sitions offer more stability, shorter hours, and better benefits. Big corp tions gain not only the cachet of a name-brand chef, but that chef's ceived ability to attract more business from the most desirable customers: people appreciate more sophisticated fare and will happily pay more for a better product.

"I don't envy young entrepreneurs starting out with 30-seat restaurants, tryi make a living," says Jasper White. "It's getting really hard to run small businesses not just restaurants—it's hardware stores, everything." Five years after he closed Jas he opened the first Summer Shack in 2000. "Today, Summer Shack is a bigger n and I like it that way," he says. "For me, fine dining was really personal." The Sun Shack stores, he explains, can make him money without his constant presence.

Two years ago, Thomas John, the executive chef who opened Mantra, signed executive chef of Au Bon Pain. Today, as he creates panini and pizzas made on Ir flatbread, he works an easier schedule that affords time for life with his family. And Stan Frankenthaler, who opened and closed two Salamanders and one Red Herri now Dunkin' Donuts' executive chef, creating recipes for curry coffee glaze a "peanut butter bomb" drink featured on the company's Web site.

Does the success of Finale, whose founders used their Harvard MBA's to cook strategic business concept (a chain of "desserteries"), prove that corporate is now at as important as creative vision? Well, the restaurant business always has been a bus

10. Savenor's reopens in Cambridge.

Just as many chefs and restaurants have become virtual brand names, their supp (farmers, purveyors, aquaculturists) have achieved an unprecedented level of rec tion, albeit on a smaller scale. "Several of our very first purveyors are still our purve says Mary-Catherine Deibel, co-owner of UpStairs on the Square with Deb Hughes. "Pat Woodbury, who sells the best farmed clams and oysters, drove up he Saturday mornings with his kids, who are adults now," she recalls. "John Dewa starting his [butcher] business back when we were! And we bought from Eva Somm when she'd just started her organic herb farm."

Eva's herbs and Pat's clams often are mentioned by name on local menus. Sc highest in name recognition, though, is Savenor's Market, the family-owned gou butcher shop that provided Julia Child with every cut of meat prepared on all 11 se of The French Chef, and today supplies organic, prime and exotic meats (bison, goos trich) to many of the city's finest restaurants. Last year, the Savenor family open second retail location (the first is on Beacon Hill) on the site where the ori Savenor's stood from 1939 until 1992, when it was destroyed by a fire.

Today, restaurateurs often buy fresh produce trucked into town by farmers wh cialize in niche products: heirloom tomatoes, for example, or herbs and greens. I lass, who receives regular deliveries at Icarus from organic Nesenkeag Farm in Hampshire, remembers when chef Tom Hall would wheel a shopping cart to a loca ian grocer for olives and cheese, then pick up produce from "Tony, the Greek gree cer who bought end-of-the-day produce from the Chelsea market. He had everyth arugula, fresh herbs—but it was no-frills. No cash register, cash-only."

As diners become familiar with the names of purveyors credited by restaurants seek out the same ingredients used by big-name chefs. Ron Savenor says his reta tomers fall into two groups: "foodies, and people who want the very best, whatev price. People are coming back to this." IB

1. The Beacon Hill Savenor's replaced the original, founded in Cambridge in 1939 and rebuilt last year. 2. Rialto helped lead the way in the hotel fine-dining revolution. 3. Meritage joined the growing pack of top-tier hotel restaurants. 4. Growing competition spawned restaurants with hundreds of seats and multiple locations, like Jasper White's Summer Shack. 5. Ming Tsai made ethnic cuisine fine dining in 1998, with Blue Ginger. 6. Ken Oringer's Clio brought a New York influence to Boston.

CHEFS—THEY'RE JUST LIKE US!

BY JOLYON HELTERMAN PHOTOGRAPHS BY LAURA B. KOZLOWSKI

When you step though the doors of Radius, Michael Schlow's swanky Financial District restaurant, it's like entering some fantasy realm of Supreme Culinary Haute-ness. Sure, the space is sleek and lavish—with a column-buttressed ceiling that soars dramatically toward the sky. But it's the fancy-pants ingredients in the kitchen that keep this eatery planted firmly in the stratosphere: foie gras, morel mushrooms and custom cuts of prime beef, whipped up into inventive entrées that command prices of close to 50 bucks apiece. Ditto Frank McClelland and L'Espalier, his ultraluxe French boîte in the Back Bay where $100-an-ounce ossetra caviar is tossed onto finished dishes with the rec abandon that most chefs reserve for chopped parsley.

Yes, Schlow, McClelland and their talented colleagues know a thing or two about ing—and enjoying—rarefied dishes. Yet even four-star chefs can't live on shaved tr and goose-liver mousse alone. They get hankerings for simple, tasty and inexpensive fort food just like the rest of us. The difference is, they've got the trained palates to k where to find the best. Here's what Boston's top chefs crave when they're off the cloc

OWNER MARY-CATHERINE DEIBEL— UPSTAIRS ON THE SQUARE

The Dish She Craves:
Cheeseburger ($12) from Casablanca
40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-0999)

Why She Craves It:
"I order the burger rare with cheddar cheese and mayo, along with their great fries. This is what I always crave—and always have craved since coming to Harvard Square back in 1982."

CHEF BARBARA LYNCH— NO. 9 PARK, B&G OYSTERS, THE BUTCHER SHOP

The Dish She Craves:
Cuban sandwich ($12.95) from Chez Henri
1 Shepard St., Cambridge
(617-354-8980)

Why She Craves It:
"A few times a month I get a craving for the cubanos at Chez Henri—I've even been known to swing by before flying somewhere to take one on the plane. A good cubano is salty, spicy and rich with crunchy bread, smooth melted cheese and crisp pickles. Paul does it right, with a perfect ratio of ingredients."

CHEF ANUPAM JOGLEKAR— MANTRA

The Dish He Craves:
Tandoori chicken ($14) from Kashmir
279 Newbury St., Boston
Why He Craves It:
"The taste and the textures re me of the tandoori dinner t used to make with my Dad-

CHEF FRANK MCCLELLAND— L'ESPALIER, SEL DE LA TERRE

The Dish He Craves:
Pork fried rice ($6.75) and shr dumplings ($3.75) from Men
Japanese Noodle Café
66 Hereford St., Boston (617-425
Why He Craves It:
"It's the perfect place to grab a eat after an intense workout. I fies the need for both protein ar bohydrates—it also energizes m they slurp down noodle soup!

CHEF JODY ADAMS—ALTO

The Dish She Craves:
Udon noodle soup ($5.49)
from Ittyo
1815 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
(617-354-5944)

Why She Craves It:
"For me, a bowl of Asian noodles means comfort. The soup is easy, hot, satisfying and steamy. I love the doughy udon noodles, dashi broth, greens and tempura vegetables. We used to take our children to Ittyo; it was very easy for everybody. You could drive a stroller up to the table and nobody cared. And you could even get a beer there! It's the ultimate comfort—when I think about it, I think about my family and my kids."

CHEF TOM FOSNOT—BLU

The Dish He Craves:
Glazed cake doughnut ($0.65) from Verna's Donut Shop

Why He Craves It:
"They can be difficult to get—they're typically all gone by 9—or even 8—in the morning. Luckily, those of us with young children are up early, so for a special treat, I'll walk to the Donut Shop with my 2-year-old son, Finn. These doughnuts are denser than the typical glazed doughnut and have a very thick sugar coating. They're better than anything produced at Dunkin' Donuts. I just wish Verna's would make more of them!"

CHEF CHRIS ROBINS—ARMANI CAFE, AQUITAINE BIS

The Dish He Craves:
Steak tacos ($12 for three) from Bonfire
50 Park Plaza, Boston (617-262-3473)

Why He Craves It:
"I really like the fatty, charred taste of the skirt steak tacos at Bonfire. They're served with pico de gallo, and it's an unbeatable combo of flavors and textures—especially good with a Hornitos margarita. The spicy tuna tartare taco is no slouch either."

CHEF JOANNE CHANG—FLOUR BAKERY + CAFE

The Dish She Craves:
Sautéed eggplant and basil ($8.95) from Taiwan Café
34 Oxford St., Boston (617-426-8181)

Why She Craves It:
"Maybe it's not comfort food for everyone, but it definitely is for me. Silky Asian eggplant, lots of fresh Thai basil, and a hot/spicy/sweet/garlicky sauce. I can't stop eating it!"

CHEF MARC ORFALY—PIGALLE, MARCO

The Dish He Craves:
Extra-spicy steak bomb ($5.75) from Mangia Mangia
147 Endicott St., Boston (617-523-1768)
Why He Craves It:
"Not only is it fresh and delicious, but since i only available at lunch on weekdays, you crave especially during the times you can't get it!"

CHEF MICHAEL SCHLOW—RADIUS, VIA MATTA, GREAT BAY

The Dish He Craves:
Fried clam roll ($13) at Jasper White's Summer Shack
50 Dalton St., Boston (617-867-9955)
Why He Craves It:
"Aside from being incredibly tasty and going w with a cold beer, this fried clam roll takes me ba to my childhood, when I was 'officially' dubb addicted to them at age 10."

CHEF JAMIE MAMMANO—MISTRAL, TEATRO, SORELLINA

The Dish He Craves:
BBQ beef Vietnamese sandwich ($2.50) from Ba Le Restaurant
1052 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester (617-265-7171)
Why He Craves It:
"This inexpensive Vietnamese sandwich is ser on crisp, perfectly light French bread filled w meat, vegetables and sauce that are deliciously vory and spicy."

CHEF JAY MURRAY—GRILL 23

The Dish He Craves:
Albondigas soup ($7.25) from Mexico Lindo
449 Main St., Melrose (781-662-4056)
Why He Craves It:
"Albondigas (pork m balls with carrot, zucch and potato in chicken broth) bring back f memories of working at the restaurant Am in Chicago with a crew of great Mexi cooks—and the best family meals I've had in business!"

LCHEMIST LOUNGE	July	435 South Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain 617-477-5741	$8–$19	Managing to be both cozy and sleek, this casual, affordable spot owned by a J.P. couple (her paintings hang on the walls) serves sandwiches, burgers, flatbread pizza, pasta, and meat and fish entrées in the restaurant and at the bar.
LL STAR SANDWICH AR	August	1245 Cambridge St., Cambridge 617-868-3065 www.allstarsandwichbar.com	$2.75–$14.50	Chris Schlesinger's Inman Square sandwich spot, a few storefronts down from his popular East Coast Grill, specializes in classic American sandwiches (like the Gobbler: roast turkey with apple-sausage stuffing and orange-cranberry relish), simple grilled fare and beer on tap.
NISE	May	1 Kendall Square, Building 300, Cambridge 617-577-8668	$13–$23	Suburban Sichuan queen Zheng Hu (owner of Chilli Garden in Medford) offers up an authentic (read: spicy) take on Sichuan fare with dishes like whole striped bass, duck tongue and spicy rabbit.
TWOOD'S TAVERN	April	877 Cambridge St., Cambridge 617-864-2792 www.atwoodstavern.com	$9.95–$13.95	This Inman Square pub boasts a menu featuring affordable comfort foods, with options like linguine alfredo and pork chops. The kitchen is open nightly until 12 am.
VILA	May	1 Charles St. South, Boston 617-267-4810 www.avilarestaurant.com	$20–$45	This pan-Mediterranean eatery, tucked into a chic space at 1 Charles, serves tapas-sized bites like garlic shrimp, and full-on entrées that make ample use of the kitchen's fiery grill.
EACON STREET AVERN	July	1032 Beacon St., Brookline 617-713-2700	$17–$22	This bar/restaurant from the folks who brought you the nearby Washington Square Tavern features a unique wine list and a slew of entrées like steak and turkey tips, fish and chips, and eggplant napoleon.
IN 26 ENOTECA	September	26 Charles St., Boston 617-723-5939 www.bin26.com	$12–$26	The owners of Beacon Hill staple Lala Rokh opened this wine bar that serves rustic Italian fare and offers more than 50 wines by the glass. Lunch and brunch are in the future.
OUCHÉE	September	157 Newbury St., Boston 617-450-4343 www.bouchee.com	$13–$36	The old DuBarry may be long gone from its former two-story haunt, but the Gallic spirit endures in the steak frites and coq au vin at chef Tim Partridge's French brasserie, which just moved in.
A BRACE	June	76 Salem St., Boston 617-523-8820	$13.95–$28.95	Mark Fredette, formerly of Mare, mans the kitchen at La Brace, which means "grill" in Italian. The extensive menu includes handmade pastas and grilled seafood and meats, such as Colorado lamb and honey-glazed pork chops.
ONUNDRUM	April	56 JFK St., Cambridge 617-868-0335 www.conundrumrestaurant.com	$13–$22	Chefs Eric Wernsing and Jen Pearson take globalization to the next level with the menu at their 46-seat eatery, which encompasses everything from French and Mexican to Asian and New American dishes.
OPIA	September	100 City Square, Charlestown 617-242-6393 www.copiarestaurant.com	$24–$36	Copia has just taken over the expansive space that housed Meze. In the capable hands of chef Anthony Caturano of Prezza, this Mediterranean-influenced restaurant serves a selection of hot and cold appetizers and fish and meat entrées, from seafood paella to wood-grilled lamb skewers.
ANTE	April	Royal Sonesta Hotel, 5 Cambridge Pkwy., Boston; 617-497-4200 http://restaurantdante.com	$22–$36	The talented Dante de Magistris turns out creative, Mediterranean-inspired fare (chips on fish, porcini-braised scallops and handmade spaghetti, for example) at his upscale restaurant with a fabulous view of the Charles and stylish décor by Dennis Duffy.
IVA LOUNGE	February	248 Elm St., Somerville 617-629-4963	$4–$9 (tapas)	Walls of glass bubbles create a groovy atmosphere at this lounge attached to the Indian restaurant of the same name. Menu highlights include exotic fruit- and spice-infused cocktails and nibbles such as dosas, samosas and ultrasmoky tandoori mushrooms.
TK BAR AND ITCHEN	June	225 Northern Ave., Boston 617-330-7430 www.ltkbarandkitchen.com/site	$8.95–$23.95	Boston fixture Legal Sea Foods reinvents itself at this tech-themed offshoot with touch-screen menus and tabletop iPod docking stations, but the seafood offerings are still classic—like lobster rolls, wood-plank-grilled salmon and clam chowder.
ISHII BOSTON	July	1166 Washington St., Boston 617-482-8868	$25–$60	This South End outpost of the Chestnut Hill original boasts a sleek, minimalist décor—an apt setting for some of the most upscale sushi around. Hyperfresh raw fish is paired with caviar, shaved truffles and rare ingredients like peppercorn blossoms.
MELETTRY CAFE	June	284 Washington St., Brookline 617-739-5500	$2.95–$9.95	This hole-in-the-wall Mexican eatery in Brookline Village specializes in more than mere huevos, offering quick hits from Mexico (and Tex-Mexico) like quesadillas with chorizo, black beans and sweet corn, chicken molé and a build-your-own-burrito menu.
ANIFICIO	August	61 Mass. Ave., Boston 617-778-7769 www.panificiobackbay.com	$10.50–$19	At this Back Bay eatery, you'll find the same menu (eggs, baked goods and such in the morning; sandwiches, pastas, and other entrées later in the day) as the original Panificio in Beacon Hill, but more than quadruple the seating.
ETIT ROBERT BISTRO	July	480 Columbus Ave., Boston 617-867-0600 www.petitrobertbistro.com	$13.50–$20	Entrées top out at just under $20 at this South End French-food haven, including grilled duck breast with duck-leg confit, roast leg of rabbit and boeuf bourguignon. The pastry bar draws attention for a dessert that comes with a chocolate Eiffel Tower.
UINCE BISTRO	April	1019 Great Plain Ave., Needham 781-449-0022 www.quincebistro.com	$24–$29	Quince's menu includes sophisticated dishes like grilled blue marlin and a double-cut venison chop, plus a four-course tasting menu option. Or, if you have a particular craving, ask chef Ian Grossman to whip something up using your favorite ingredients—he encourages special requests.
ED SKY	June	16-18 North St., Boston 617-742-3333 www.redskyboston.com	$15–$22	Heaping portions (burgers, sandwiches, pasta, fish, chicken and steak), a chill atmosphere and an upscale clientele characterize this Faneuil Hall spot that fans say has the feel of a Manhattan lounge, without any pretension.
ESTAURANT PAVA	July	1229 Centre St., Newton 617-965-0905 www.restaurantpava.com	$24–$34	The vibe at this Newton Italian-Mediterranean eatery is as chic as the clothing boutique (Tess & Carlos) with which it shares both owner and wall. Chef Susan Regis (formerly of Biba) serves up burgers ground from Kobe beef, wood-fired pizzas and plenty of pastas.
AUCIETY	June	Westin Boston Waterfront Hotel, 425 Summer St., Boston 617-532-4670 www.sauciety.com	$23–$39	Dipping is the name of the game at the new Westin Waterfront's American-style grill restaurant, which offers standards like seared salmon and grilled aged sirloin with any two of the menu's 15 sauces (e.g., béarnaise or five-chili molé) on the side.
OULFIRE BBQ	June	182 Harvard Ave., Allston 617-787-3003 www.soulfirebbq.com	$8–$21	Chef Wyeth Lynch's Allston BBQ joint boasts the requisite array of wings and ribs, as well as a few unique perks like a fried catfish sandwich and a do-it-yourself sauce bar.
RESCA	May	233 Hanover St., Boston 617-742-8240 www.trescanorthend.com	$18–$36	Modeled on a Tuscan villa and co-owned by Bruins legend Ray Bourque, Tresca offers Italian fare both classic (handmade ricotta ravioli) and unique (coriander-crusted ostrich tenderloin), as well as a chef's tasting menu that changes nightly.
NTAGE LOUNGE	September	72 Broad St., Boston 617-482-1900 www.vlboston.com	$22–$35	Expected to open in September for lunch and soon thereafter for dinner, this Financial District spot's menu includes short ribs with Moroccan spices, pan-roasted duck breast and hanger steak with potato fondue.
ENNA NOODLE BAR	August	1374 Beacon St., Brookline 617-566-0566 www.zennanoodlebar.com	$8.25–$15.95	Coolidge Corner's newest noodle bar serves up an array of salads, appetizers, stir fries and soups, highlighted by the self-proclaimed "Best Pad Thai in Town" for $7.25.

MOPSY

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

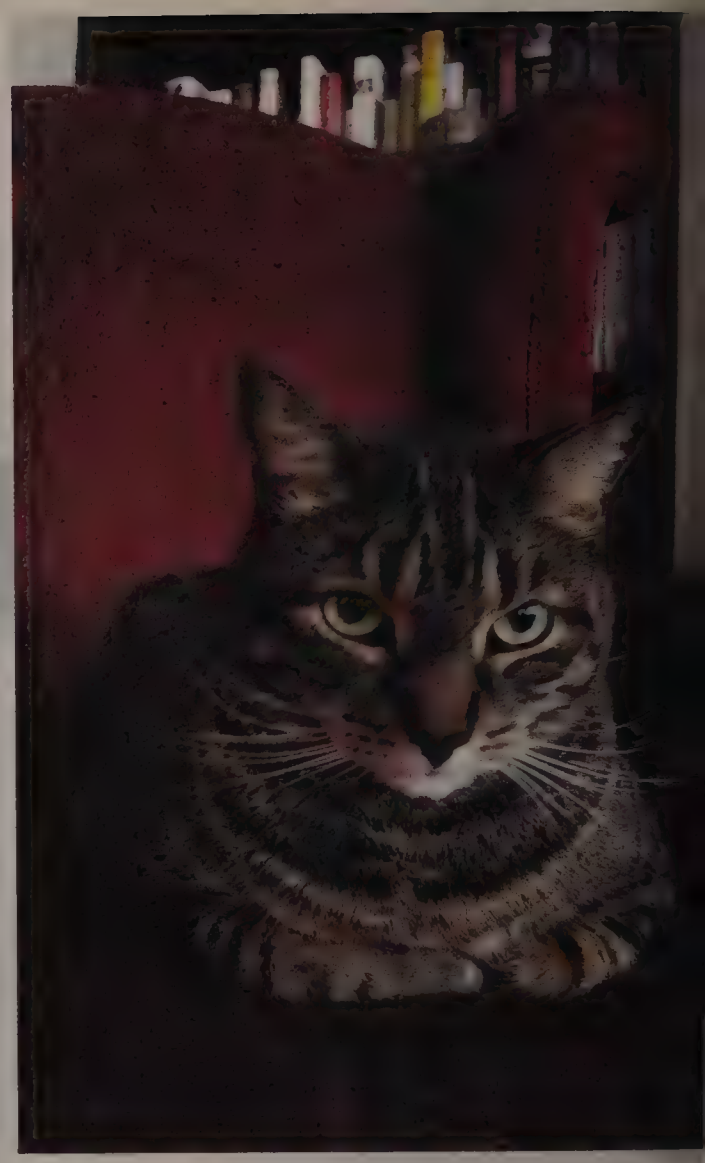
CAPTURE THE PAST BEFORE IT HAS PASSED

Antiques on Cambridge (1076 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 617-234-0001), open Tue.–Sun., 11 am–6 pm, is closing its doors Dec. 3. Very good sales now and through the end.

Once adorned streetside with a jaunty suit of armor, this marvelously eclectic, jam-packed paradise of antiques of all kinds, organized by vendor, is in its last months. The shop specializes in sophisticated furniture, like a Carpathian Walnut table, or an expandable table for behind the sofa, topped with green for card-playing, made of solid woods that have lasted 100 years and that "will last 200 to 300 more," says owner Bert Rosengarten. Pretty, comfortable Northern European Biedermeier chairs come with parlor-perfect high-end upholstery, while big, crunchy-textured woodblocks for printing fabric or wallpaper live on as objets d'art. Each glass case spills forth treasures with the flavor of Old World beauty—sets of sterling silver, romantically patterned and rich-looking, fine and refined sets of china, porringers and baby spoons, delicate, long-fingered forks designed to stab olives and gherkins, and big, round silver trays loaded with delicately etched wine glasses, tureens and ladles. All these appurtenances of a gracious past era could beautifully warm up starker 21st-century surroundings. Hours can be spent eyeing the ornate jewelry depicted in antique photos in little golden frames, yielding surprising moments of high originality.

CATS, DOGS, EVEN A HUGE IGUANA IN BELMONT

Amy's Pet Pals (617-923-2322) will walk your dog or feed and visit your animals (in Newton, Brookline, Cambridge and Watertown) while you're away. $15 per visit.



Amy Boutiette and her husband, John, are coming up on 10 years with the woofers and the meowers they care for: "We still love every minute." And it shows. John, mostly during the week, assembles dogs in a big van and offers them playgroup merriment in a Cambridgeport park. "They really listen to John," says Amy. Some sport about without a leash, others drag the leash while they get the hang of it. The couple also feed, visit and attend to cats, birds, even a four-foot iguana. "We don't discriminate," laughs Amy. With a new client, they make a home visit, get acquainted with the lay of the land while getting to know the animal, learning his or her likes, dislikes and preferred ways of being approached, including those "neuroses" that Mama's Little BabyCat sometimes displays. They also administer simple medications. Pet Pals stay about half an hour to feed and talk to Fluffy and water plants. Afterward, leave a cozy note reporting on the doings of the perhaps anxiously home-alone kitties. Amy worked with injured and orphaned wildlife at Drumlin Farms, and her heart is in there too with felines of privilege she cares for.

CHICK-CHUCKLING LIT

Local comedy writer Sara Faith Alterman's second novel is Tears of a Class Clown.

REVIEW

MUCHO MÁS

Davio's new sister restaurant, Avila, serves a touch of the Mediterranean in its downtown spot.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

When the owners of Davio's in the Back Bay opened Avila a couple of blocks to the east on South Charles Street, the undertaking intrigued me. Could they replicate their success on Arlington Street by tweaking the concept, moving from an Italian-accented steakhouse to a Mediterranean restaurant with a steakhouse accent? After two dinners at Avila, I'm cautiously optimistic. Time will tell if this eatery will achieve the kind of following that Davio's enjoys, but if its kitchen continues to turn out the creative, well-constructed dishes that I encountered on my visits, the prospects are very good indeed.

Housed on the ground floor of a nondescript new building in the restaurant-rich Park Square area, Avila opens to an expansive, 30-plus-seat V-shaped bar. To the right, a large colorful painting (depicting what looks like a Ligurian village clinging to the side of the Maritime Alps) hangs above the entrance podium. Beyond looms a large dining room, with a single, massive yellow pillar breaking up the space, tall plate-glass windows reaching toward an even higher ceiling, and one wall upholstered in rich, dark-red fabric. A second colorful painting of small boats and larger sailing craft hangs on another wall. An elevated chef's table sits at the entrance to the dining room across from the open kitchen. On the far side of the dining room lies a glass-walled special-events room that can be divided into two smaller rooms by drawing the draperies. On busy evenings, like those during August's Restaurant Week, this private room is opened to accommodate overflow from the dining room, but its lower ceiling and Spartan décor make it somewhat sterile in appearance.

The food on both of my visits started with an amuse-bouche of spicy gazpacho served in a tequila shooter glass. After the gazpacho played reveille for my taste buds, a basket of fine breads and a small brick of soft butter followed to take the edge off my appetite: crisp, crusty rustic loaves, moist focaccia, and thin, chewy garlic-and-parmesan-encrusted flat breads, all baked in Davio's ovens.

First courses included a cod cake appetizer (on the Restaurant Week prix-fixe menu), a small but exquisite, gently sautéed patty of cod, herbs and minced vegetables, garnished with microcilantro, a lively tomato concassé in the nature of salsa cruda (a combination of fresh tomato, basil and garlic), and aioli. Another Restaurant Week appetizer, the beef tenderloin carpaccio, featured ultrathin slices of lean beef, horseradish crème fraîche and red-and-yellow beet salad. This refined, delicate ensemble, beautifully presented on a rectangular white plate, delighted the eye but was so sparse that it could've served as the poster child for the notorious nouvelle cuisine of several years ago.

More substantial, the steak tartare ($15) brought an ample mound of raw beef blended with capers and shallots, with a warm tarragon sauce and slices of toasted bread. Crispy calamari ($ came lightly battered and quickly frie tender perfection. In contrast to both carpaccio and cod cake, the cala were plentiful enough to share, and t garnish of ripe, rich avocado slices hearts of palm gave the dish depth variety. Salt cod fritters ($11), t spheres the size of billiard balls, pro extraordinary. While so light and deli that their ultrathin, quick-fried crus most melted in my mouth, the fri and their accompaniment of mi greens, tomato concassé, aioli and e virgin olive oil left me surprisingly and satisfied.

Gnocchi ($12 for a half order; $22 whole order), identified on the men "Davio's handrolled gnocchi," dem strated why they form a signature di that estimable restaurant. Very ligh most ethereal in texture, these satiny pillows, dressed with shaved Parm white truffle oil and basil, were as diff from the sinker-like gnocchi serve most restaurants as Mozart is from M Crüe. Mediterranean salad ($10) e won the prize for best presentation: ■ of sliced red and yellow tomatoes, cu bers, olives, red onions, mild Manouri fresh basil and a hint of cumin in its v grette. Finally among the starters, the cheese pyramides ($11) brought h dozen tender ravioli, more like pot sti than traditional ravioli, garnished crispy prosciutto and bathed in a pa thyme broth, exquisite in texture, f and aroma.

Avila's menu offers a category of plates, appetizers only slightly smal size than the first courses. One of t crispy fresh sardines ($5), had been ily breaded and fried to a hard, crisp which somehow did little to ameli their unpleasantly strong fishy flavor tunately, a second small-plate offe sautéed asparagus, poached duck eg white truffle oil ($8), more than cor sated for the sardine misstep. The slender spears of asparagus, at once t and remarkably flavorful (despite ap ing many weeks past the height of th son), came accented with melting P san cheese and white truffle oil. loving on to the main courses, the er-poached lobster ($42) arrived freed n its shell and surrounded with delicate etables that highlighted the lobster's y, sweet flavor. The accompaniment of uccine carbonara in a separate small erole could've made a meal in itself, cious and satisfying. Chicken under a k ($25), served with mashed celery , black truffle sauce and brussels uts, emerged less moist and succulent n promised by this traditional method reparation. Better was the filet mignon 9), obviously reflecting the Davio's n's expertise with steak. This thick, ety-textured hunk of beef arrived as ordered, with good full-beef flavor. Coast halibut ($27) seemed dry and tandard in texture, but the lamb ten- pin souvlaki ($29) boasted rare, ten- succulent, full-flavored lamb paired a savory and satisfying Greek feta to.

ivila's dessert cart, reflecting not so h Mediterranean as a more classical pean tradition, presented a panoply of istible treats. All the desserts on the wagon were elaborate presentations involving two or three separate items arrayed on white rectangular plates. The chocolate-frosted mousse cake and fruit puff pastry could've stood up well to any area dessert competition, but it was the warm chocolate cake ($10) that captured first prize with me. Shaped like a butte or mesa, and dusted with confectionary sugar, this warm, moist, molten-centered chocolate cake came with sour-cherry compote and three small balls of espresso ice cream, whose intense coffee flavor lingered long after the creamy treat melted on the tongue.

Despite an aggressively priced wine list, I discovered a more than serviceable red, the 2001 Labradores Portuguese Douro ($27), full-flavored with good tannic backbone and sufficient acidity to stand up well to the food. Service at Avila exceeded my expectations one busy Friday during restaurant week, when, despite the crush of patrons, our large party was served efficiently and with grace and good humor. On a subsequent, much slower evening, things seemed a little less organized. Still, after a couple of long waits for the server at the beginning of the meal, service reverted to the informed, professional, attentive and friendly standard that had marked my first visit. IB

Will Quince Convince?

Chef lets diners choose their own adventure.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

During his years at L'Espalier in the Back Bay, chef Ian Grossman polished a range of skills as he cooked in the kitchen, helped manage the restaurant and assisted the sommelier. So it's no surprise that his menu at Quince Bistro in Needham is wide-ranging, sophisticated and upscale. What's striking is Grossman's earnest desire to please every diner by offering flexibility to an extent many would consider potentially crazy-making.

At the bottom of the dinner menu, diners are encouraged to "take an active role" and "create [their] ultimate menu" by telling Grossman their favorite ingredients so he can "create a personalized menu designed just for [them]." Mind you, this is every night, including Saturdays. And it's in addition to a nightly tasting menu and a nightly Farmer's Market Sampling menu that consists of seven bigger-than-tapas-sized portions of seasonal treats such as corn-battered shrimp over muskmelon salad and scallop ceviche with lemon cucumber and purslane.

Is there really just one Ian Grossman? Is it possible to achieve success by offering a meticulously prepared regular menu (venison chop with fresh cherry pinot noir sauce; pheasant galantine with white barley) and then tempting diners to mess with it? Stay tuned.

In a world where vegetarianism runs rampant and consumers' appetite for processed or prepared foods is apparently insatiable, why is Ron Savenor offering a series of butchery classes?

"I gotta tell you, when they first posed the idea to me, I said, 'Who's going to want to do that?'" recounts Savenor, of the storied Savenor's Market in Cambridge. "Two days before the first class, the manager told me we were sold out."

Next in the series, on Oct. 7, is the winsomely titled Rabbit Tales. Can people get past the warm-and-fuzzy-bunny concept to actually cut up and eat rabbit?

"Rabbit's a nice meat," says Savenor. "It's popular everywhere except at my house. My wife had a pet bunny, so that's something we'll never eat. My daughter has a pet rabbit, and I tell her, 'That rabbit's worth more to me dead!'"

Savenor says that fans of rabbit will be in for a treat if they pick up some wild blue hare meat at the market. "It's from Scotland, a dark meat, and ours is the only ket in New England where it's sold," he

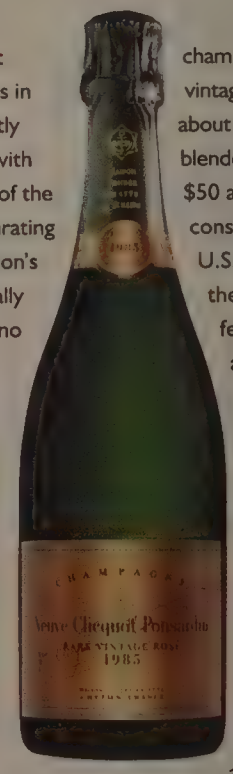
WINE

Vintage Champagne

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.



Champagne is one of the most poorly understood beverages in this country. People frequently misuse the term to denote any wine with bubbles. This is an unfortunate result of the decades-long practice in the U.S. of pirating this unique northern French wine region's name to market inferior, often artificially carbonated sparkling wine that bears no relation to the real thing. Many consumers don't seem to regard champagne as a wine, but instead as something else entirely. Wine is for dinner, perhaps on an everyday basis; champagne is for celebration. In reality, champagne's polished and carefully cultivated image often prevents it from being appreciated in the way other wines are: for their aroma and flavor attributes. Despite the fact that there are tangible differences among champagnes, even some aficionados are more attracted by the status and connotations of a particular brand than they are by the wine in the bottle.

Few champagne brands have enjoyed greater popular appeal than Veuve Clicquot. The signature Yellow Label is iconic. Even though, or perhaps because, Clicquot carries a price premium over most of the other champagnes classified as "brut non-vintage," it's the category's bestseller in the U.S. Devoted fans are disappointed if they can't find their favorite bubbly in a store or on a restaurant's wine list. Other brands have strong advocates as well, each attracted by the consistent style that the particular company produces, which is based largely on the villages within the Champagne region from which they source grapes. Of all the champagne produced, the non-vintage blend is generally the company flagship, constituting about 90 percent of overall production and more than 75 percent of the champagne sold in the U.S. For truly special occasions, the ultra-expensive "prestige cuvées," or vintage-dated luxury champagnes (some aged for seven or eight years before release) are also extremely popular. Veuve Clicquot "La Grande Dame," Dom Perignon, Roederer Cristal and Taittinger Comtes de Champagne each have a loyal following undeterred by pricing, which ranges from about $135 per bottle to well over $200. Incredibly enough, this category, which makes up a tiny percentage of overall production, represents over 15 percent of all the champagnes Americans consume.

The most ignored type of champagne is also the most wine-like. Straight, unblended vintage champagne is generally aged at least five years, and reflects the growing conditions of a particular terrain, so it shows more individuality and sometimes a bit of a rougher edge than other champagnes. Much less expensive than the vintage-dated prestige cuvées, but only about 30 percent more costly than the blended Brut NVs—which fall in the $35 to $50 a bottle range—vintage champagnes constitute only about 4 percent of the U.S. market. More people probably buy them by mistake than deliberately, since few of the champagne companies actively promote vintage products in the U.S. market.

Veuve Clicquot has recently launched a limited quantity of a truly great vintage champagne that's been aging in its cellars on the yeast lees for 17 years. Rare Vintage 1988 is a unique and brilliant wine, with tremendous purity of aroma and a rich, creamy texture. One taste refutes the myth that champagnes are to be consumed immediately, and don't have the capacity to age. Vintage champagne can age for decades given impeccable storage conditions, but Clicquot Rare Vintage is not like most other vintage-dated champagnes. It ages in the chilly Champagne region's cellars for its entire life span, in contact with the same yeasts that were originally responsible for creating bubble during the wine's second fermentation. Rare Vintage benefits from these yeasts' slow release of nutrients and subtle aromatics into the wine. The yeasts preserve the champagne and keep it fresh and youthful. Once "disgorged," or separated from the yeasts, the benefits of aging are less clear, but the concept behind Rare Vintage is that the champagne will be fresher and more vibrant than the same vintage released in the mid-1990s because of the conditions of its aging in the cellar.

Characterized by elegance, finesse, pinpoint acidity and lemony, apple-like flavors, 1988 is my favorite champagne vintage. It has an advanced color of light gold, with classic aromas of toasted orange brioche. Ripe and citric, with very poignant acids and a hint of mintiness on the finish, this a rich, satisfying wine made to accompany the most sumptuous of fish dishes: turbot in a creamy sauce with morels, sautéed lobster with lemon and butter, classic Dover sole. The champagne's mellow harmonies also make it a beautifully balanced choice for smoked fish. The bottle price is about $100, which is substantially higher than most vintage champagnes, but considering the long aging in the cellar, the rarity (a few thousand bottles for the whole country) and the wine's great pedigree, it strikes me as a reasonable price. Music: Grinding NEMO

NEMO's turning 10! No, we're not talking about Pixar's scrappy little clownfish. This is the NEMO Music Festival, the New England Music Organization's yearly celebration of all things melodious. The festival kicks off Sept. 27 at 7 pm with the Boston Music Awards—held at Avalon and cosponsored by the IMPROPER—recognizing the best in Boston-based music over the past year, with performances from the likes of Melissa Ferrick, the Slip, Sonya Kitchell and the Dents. The following three days bring performances from more than 300 bands (appearing at 30-some venues in and around Boston), music-themed panel discussions, clinics and conferences, and a show at the BCA where around 60 exhibitors will display art and other wares. Past NEMO performers include current big names like Ray LaMontagne, the Click 5 and the Dresden Dolls, and this year's lineup builds on NEMO's tradition of promoting local excellence with scheduled performances by Grace Potter and the Nocturnals, 7L & Esoteric, Westgate, Diamond Nights and Be Your Own Pet. Visit www.nemoboston.com for a full schedule of events. —RL

Music: Bilingual Beats

Even if we weren't fans of Yo La Tengo's eclectic brand of melody-centered indie, we'd feel compelled to check out the tour for their latest album, I Am Not Afraid and I Will Beat Your Ass, on the merits of its title alone. Formed in 1984 by husband-and-wife team Ira Kaplan and Georgia Hubley, Yo La Tengo—named for the Spanish phrase (translation: "I've got it") that the 1962 Mets adopted to bridge the language barrier in their outfield—released their debut album, Ride the Tiger, on the Matador label in 1986, and they haven't looked back. The Hoboken, N.J.–based trio (now with bassist James McNew) has crafted a 20-plus-year career founded on solid albums, chill sound and a dedicated fan base that will surely pack into Avalon for the group's latest Boston show. Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St. Boston (617-262-2424). www.yolatengo.com. 8 pm. $20.25. —RL

CityScope: How Sweet It Is

If you've never experienced visceral cravings for a Fluffernutter sandwich, you're probably not from around these parts. Ever since Somerville native Archibald Query invented the noxiously sweet glop here in 1917, Marshmallow Fluff has been a key component of every New Englander's childhood diet. To celebrate this ingenious invention, Somerville hosts the first-ever "What the Fluff?" festival, with local artists, musical and theatrical performers, inventors and comedians converging on Union Square to pay homage to the plastic tub of gooey fun for one afternoon. Highlights include a performance by the Thru the Keyhole Cuties as 1930s radio stars the Flufferettes; an exhibition of Fluff-inspired art; a battle of the bands for a new Fluff jingle; a cooking contest for Fluff-based recipes; a tug-of-war over a kiddie pool filled with Fluff; and a science fair featuring the latest in Fluff-inspired inventions. Union Square Plaza, Somerville. www.unionsquaremain.org. 3-7 pm. Free. —LPK

Lukewarm Kiss

Tony Goldwyn's straight-ahead remake of The Last Kiss lacks fireworks.

BY SEAN BURNS

I'm not exactly sure when Zach Braff decided he was going to become my generation's personal spokesman. I know I didn't vote for him, and I'm not so sure he's the right man for the job.

Don't get me wrong—Braff's a funny guy. He's got a charming, low-key comic presence that serves him well on television, and his feature directorial debut, Garden State, displayed an interesting visual sensibility that's rare for actors who venture behind the camera. But The Last Kiss, a doggedly loyal Xerox of an Italian film by Gabriele Muccino, finds Braff very self-consciously straining to represent angsty everymen everywhere.

Zach Braff gets a kiss from his onscreen sweetie Jacinda Barrett.

Pushing 30 and still too scared to settle down, his Michael seemingly has no choice but to commit once and for all, once his longtime girlfriend Jenna (Jacinda Barrett) announces she's pregnant. The news sets off a domino effect of relationship minidramas within the couple's inner circle. Jenna's mom (Blythe Danner) isn't ready to be a grandmother and abruptly walks out on her long-suffering husband (the great Tom Wilkinson). Michael's best friend, Chris (Casey Affleck), finds his own marriage falling apart, thanks to the pressures of raising an infant son. Even shallow stud-boy Kenny (Eric Christian Olsen) is considering kicking his one-night stands and starting a new life in Mexico.

Suddenly, Michael finds himself sneaking around with a much-younger college student (The O.C.'s Rachel Bilson), stumbling towards infidelity because it feels like his last gasp at freedom. Problem is, it's tough to picture Braff gasping at anything. So far, his fallback cinematic posture involves staring into space. At least his Garden State character was supposed to be heavily medicated. For us to believe Michael's predicament, we'd need to share in his restlessness; but too often Braff slips into inertia. Bilson's character is a complete fantasy construct: If such an attractive young girl is indeed going to fall so head-over-heels for an older fuddy-duddy, we'd need to understand how he makes himself so irresistible to her. Braff just kind of sits there while she fawns over him, inexplicably.

Like all movies about guys at this point in their lives, both versions of The Last Kiss are essentially modern riffs on Federico Fellini's great I Vitelloni. But Muccino's film was impassioned to the point of being overwrought. You never really noticed how thinly the characters were drawn because they all ran around so urgently.

By contrast, this American version, directed by actor Tony Goldwyn (best known as the bad guy in Ghost and a bevy of other lousy '90s movies), takes its cue from the mellow score by Michael Penn and the relaxed demeanor of its leading man. For a movie about anxiety, it's surprisingly subdued.

It doesn't help that screenwriter Paul Haggis writes archetypes instead of people. Every character gets a moment in the spotlight during which they take their turn summing up the thesis of the movie in tidy, bite-size speeches. If Michael is feeling trapped because he gets the sense that there aren't any more surprises waiting for him in his life, rest assured you'll get a scene in which Braff turns to somebody and says: "I'm feeling trapped, because I get the sense that there aren't any more surprises left for me in my life."

It feels a bit churlish to knock The Last Kiss, because it's awfully hard these days to find a major studio willing to produce an adult drama that takes its characters and their predicaments seriously. The film is surprisingly frank when it comes to sex and nudity, and it's willing to let Michael behave in ways that most leading men just aren't allowed to anymore.

And yet something still feels like it's missing—some crucial spark of danger or messiness that would've made the movie feel alive. This is a very fussy film, full of shiny surfaces, pristine cars and immaculate apartments. Even Bilson's dorm room and Kenny's slobbo bachelor pad look art-directed to death. The most jarring performance comes from Affleck, here seething with disappointment and a sense of hurt so palpable that it knocks this prissy picture off its axis during the too-few moments he's onscreen.

The worst date movie since The Break-Up, The Last Kiss is bound to incite all sorts of uncomfortable discussions on the long ride home from the theater. But if it had just been a little bit tougher and more specific, it could've spawned screaming matches. iB e Science of Sleep ★★★

novie screens become increasingly overrun with puter-generated spectacles, the rickety, lo-fi won-conjured by director Michel Gondry couldn't be more welcome. So many images we see in cinema today are too obviously made out of ones and zeroes on somebody's workstation, but Gondry's retro eye-poppers have a lovingly handmade touch. The Science of Sleep, Gondry's first self-penned fiction film, is a brazenly autobiographical cup of whimsy. It's a sometimes brilliant, occasionally infuriating, always visually astonishing extravaganza of often-embarrassing self-pity, stuffed with moments so breathtakingly romantic they'll remind you why we go to the movies in the first place. Mexican heartthrob Gael Garcia Bernal stars as Stephane, a confused, too-sensitive young artist who has a problem separating his dreams from reality. I'd be lying if I didn't admit that all this enchantment grows somewhat wearying over the course of the film's too-long 105 minutes, but the movie lingers in your mind like a wonderful, half-remembered dream… which I guess is sort of the point. (At Coolidge Corner and Harvard Square.)

Snakes on a Plane ★★★
For a plot synopsis, see title. This exuberantly lousy, wildly entertaining crap-tacular keys into everybody's two worst fears: reptiles and flying. Don't pretend for a second that the massive underground phenomenon that's sprung up around this flick isn't our collective post-9/11 paranoia weirdly metastasizing itself into schlock. Replace the snakes with Al Qaeda and you've got United 93—but then again, that particular movie didn't have Sam Jackson cussing up a storm while swatting away fake-looking snakes in the cockpit. Snakes on a Plane is a proudly brain-dead affair, and yet something absurdly entertaining and unexpected seems to happen roughly every five minutes. Director David Ellis is a killer craftsman, striking just the right half-kidding tone. He never veers into the camp that would make this all a postmodern joke, and at the same time never quite takes himself seriously enough for it to become dull. This is a quick, efficient exploitation film, with Z-grade special effects and a contagious, slap-happy spirit. Bad movies should always be this much fun! (At Boston Common, Assembly Square, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

that he's saying something instructive about the battle of the sexes by reveling in sickening depths of misogyny. Meanwhile, the rest of us just think the guy's a pig who hates women… and kind of a cruddy filmmaker, too. Funny how LaBute's supporters have remained silent on the subject of The Wicker Man, his disastrously incompetent reworking of the creepy 1973 cult favorite. When Nicolas Cage is off his game, there's nobody who can give a performance quite as extravagantly awful, and here he scores peals of unintentional laughs as a traumatized cop searching for a missing girl on an eerie island. It's telling that LaBute turned the original tale's pagan community into a bloodthirsty cult of psychotic women. There are few sights more embarrassing than that of Cage running around in a bear costume, karate-kicking Leelee Sobieski in the breasts and screaming: "Bitches! Bitches! Bitches!" Perhaps LaBute should leave filmmaking alone for a while, and take this stuff up with his therapist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

World Trade Center ★★★
Is the world ready for the feel-good 9/11 movie of the year? In sharp contrast to Paul Greengrass' harrowing, verité-style United 93, Oliver Stone's World Trade Center is a lavishly produced, old-fashioned Hollywood melodrama. It's so mawkish and corny that I'm almost uncomfortable admitting just how much I liked it. Nicolas Cage stars as Port Authority cop John McLoughlin, who, along with fellow officer Will Jimeno (played by Crash's locksmith Michael Pena), wound up trapped beneath a mountain of rubble and concrete some 20 feet under the WTC's collapsed concourse. Devoid of the audio-visual feeding frenzies that have marked Stone's work since the early '90s, World Trade Center is photographed as a stately procession of bold, simple images. It's a good movie, but a movie nonetheless—one with big stars, clichés, a rousing score and a happy ending that bends over backward to warm your heart. I don't want to sound like those people who whine that it's "too soon" for films about 9/11, but perhaps a small part of me does feel that it might be too soon for one this slick and reassuring. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs)

TV on the Radio broadens its signal and confounds expectations.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

From the beginning, as soon as pictures started showing up, people were like, 'Wow, I didn't realize you guys were a predominantly black band,' and we'd say, 'Yeah, we never really realized it either,'" singer Tunde Adebimpe says. "It's bad enough that what a band looks like is such a huge part of getting that band out to people. I feel like it's one of the most backward things about the music industry."

TV on the Radio's eclectic taste in music comes through on their major-label debut.

The truth is, no matter what the band's appearance (and guitarist-singer Kyp Malone's bushy beard and Afro do grab attention), it's impossible to determine what TV on the Radio actually sounds like. And that's after listening.

The Brooklyn quintet's major-label debut Return to Cookie Mountain stutters to life with layered loops and samples, suggesting a recurring digital glitch in "I Was a Lover." Distortion and melody pulse through the apocalyptic dance of "Wolf Like Me." Gospel and doo-wop vocals swirl over marching-band rhythms in "A Method." And "Things You Can Do," the last of three bonus tracks, evokes the Afrobeat of Fela Kuti that Adebimpe heard as a youth in Nigeria.

"It's a pretty dense listen, but hopefully quite rewarding," he says. "When I was growing up, my parents played all sorts of music: traditional Nigerian music and jazz and classical music. It's kind of the same with a lot of people in the band. Their parents inadvertently raised art-loving people who are open to many things."

Adebimpe and guitarist-producer Dave Sitek were primarily visual artists when they met in a Brooklyn loft. "I was painting and making comics and looking for a viable way to spend my time on planet Earth," Adebimpe says. "We were trying to find other things to do besides work." Buoyed by Sitek's beatboxing skills, they began making four-track recordings, and left copies of their 2002 "debut" OK Calculator on tables in local cafés.

The singer paid bills as a stop-motion animator for MTV's Celebrity Deathmatch and a video for "Pin" by the Yeah Yeah Yeahs (friends with whom TV on the Radio played at Boston's City Hall Plaza in August). "Now that I look back on it, that was an incredibly lucky time," says Adebimpe, 31, who had studied film at NYU. "It's a really rare occasion that anyone is using stop-motion for anything, because a computer can allegedly do it better."

In 2003, Sitek sold one of his paintings to David Bowie's doorman, and passed along music that found a supporter in Bowie himself. "He contacted Dave during our first tour—after a lot of getting hung up on, when Dave finally believed that he was David Bowie," Adebimpe says of the icon whose electronic 1997 disc Earthling could be seen as a sonic influence on Cookie Mountain, along with Massive Attack's work and Peter Gabriel's 1982 landmark Security.

Bowie, who lends vocals to Cookie Mountain's "Province," advised the free online release of "Dry Drunk Emperor," an indictment of President Bush that the band recorded in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. "Not to say that releasing a song on the Internet solves anything, but the fact that it's possible means that it's possible to raise people's awareness," Adebimpe says. "Everyone's got a computer in front of them now, and they've got the Internet. It's a reminder that you can do things directly like that."

"We're not a political band at all," he says of the quintet rounded out with bassist Gerard Smith and drummer Jaleel Bunton. "If you're translating your peripheral experiences into your art, politics are going to come into it."

Lyrically and musically, Cookie Mountain is more impressionistic. "I have no idea what people are going to get out of it," Adebimpe says of the collage-like results. "It was like everyone throwing in their two cents and packing things on, and in the final stage, Dave and the assistant engineers were whittling away at everything to make sure nothing was too unwieldy and abrasive."

"We were putting things down so quickly at certain points and working in these weird shifts," Adebimpe says. "I'd go back to the record and hear something that I'd had no idea was there."

Concerts such as the band's Oct. 14 date at the Paradise offer a more stripped-down affair. "The live show is like a middle ground between the record and getting involved in the energy of being in a room with other people," he says. "It turns into more of a basement punk-rock show."

"It's definitely weird to me on a daily basis that we're on a major label," says Adebimpe, whose group first drew mainstream notice when its 2004 indie album Desperate Youth, Blood Thirsty Babes won the Shortlist Music Prize. "It's like a sign that things can't be going that well!" IB

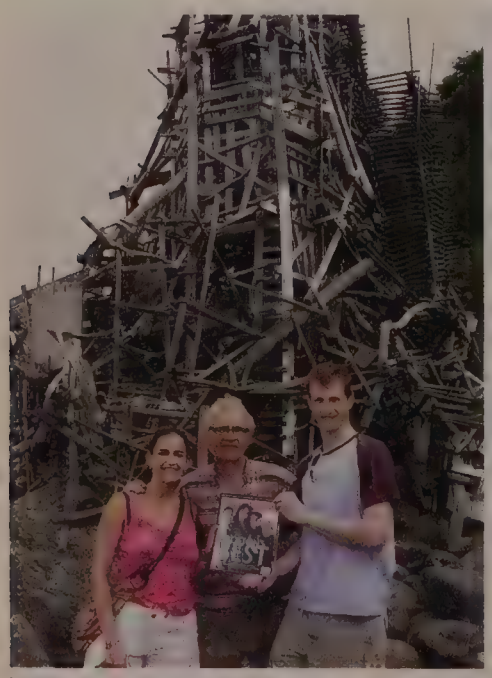
Peter Lux traveled to Brugge, Belgium, which is, of course, the fictional birthplace of Dr. Evil. Belgium's near Holland, isn't that veirdr?

Matt and Christina Walsh celebrated their honeymoon in Jamaica at the Sandals Resort in Ocho Rios, which we've decided (after hours of research), is Spanish for Eight Rios.

Ryan Goldney, Ryan Digiacomo and Sly Egidio showed Red Sox love at an Atlanta game. Lucky for them, the Braves a about the only team Sox fans can brag to these days.



While in Ladonia, Stina Kaverud and Justin Kraics met the former Ladonian president and Lincoln Log champ, Lars Wilks (middle).

Conjoined-at-the-hip twins Rebecca Smoler and Emily Ciccolo were all smiles while floating in Israel's Dead Sea, but only after a long, arduous battle to decide who'd wear the pair's lone aqua sock.

In Ghana's rainforest, Jennifer Pomeranz and Gillian Rattray crossed the canopy walk, where the macaws a lemurs model the latest in rainforest fashion.

Dearest FICUSCB (aka CBXC),

As your devout admirer, I feel it's my duty to inform you that your Nicaraguan boyfriend has been cheating on you for the past few months. She's a Mexican lesbian and works for the same company as him. Don't you think it's time to end your relationship with him and move on to a bigger and better man… like me? I'm prepared to give you the world. If you want more proof, I'll gladly provide it. All you have to do is contact me. Good luck and happy hunting!

Loving you more and more, disagree with your publishing of ersonal ads from people that are carcerated. It's gross. Do you iously think that any of your aders would respond to any of eir ads, or even find them musing? They're not entertaining nd they put your magazine in a fferent category as far as I'm ncerned. Other people have mplained about your magazine ublishing these types of ads, but u guys must think it's a joke. I elieve your readers hold higher andards than this and won't be ything but disgusted when they ave to read these hideous ads for nding someone for a jailbird.

–Devoutly Disgusted

Mooving on Out

pon returning to college this fall, y roommate and I were ticipating an enjoyable walk ound Boston's Cow Parade. owever, within a week of our turn, the cows mysteriously began vanish. The Web site for the mmy Fund promised they'd be aming the streets until the end of ptember, but their friendly painted ces and clever names have left ithout a trace. I'm disappointed at I was never able to see all the ws. To my favorite cow, the ilingual" one on Newbury Street, o spoke French and donned Eiffel wer earrings, you'll be missed.
–Lost in Transition

Takes Two to Tango

On the evening of Memorial Day a few months ago, on the No. 1 bus, we ended up chatting about the Red Sox, dancing, and the relative merits of our addictions. I thought you were heading for the Red Line, so your farewell surprised me and I was too tired to react better than to bid you farewell in return. But maybe you'd be up for dropping me a line. Or just show up at a Thursday night dance…

Only Losers Post Ads (Except Me)

To anyone who has ever posted an ad about some sort of missed connection: Do you really believe that submitting a few anonymous sentences to an online community is a responsible or legitimate manner in which to conduct the business of your love life? Posting a missed connection on Craigslist is the love-life equivalent of looking for a job by stuffing your résumé in a glass bottle and bidding it farewell as it bobs out to sea. Sure, a random person in Newfoundland may be amused when they come across your résumé, much as I am when I read your pathetic attempt at making some sort of connection, but we're all laughing at your expense. If you and your "long-lost love" were really meant to meet up again and be together, you'd have had the balls to ask for a phone number right then and there.
—Fused and Amused

Guys, Show Us Some Chivalry

To all you Boston college boys: Whatever happened to going out to dinner? Sure, I've enjoyed the countless times beer has been spilled on me at frat parties. And oh yes, I really did love when your eyes rolled back in your head as you asked me for my number. But I want to be taken out on a classic date. The kind with dinner and a movie, opened car doors (or cab doors), the bill being taken care of without question and a simple kiss goodnight. I'm not alone. So, to all you college boys out there, let us ladies know that chivalry is not dead and become real college men!
—Missing Men

Do You Want Spittle With That?

While I may be cleaning the slop off your table for a few more years, I comfort myself with the knowledge that I will never be as rude and inconsiderate as you are. At $2.63 an hour, I should not be expected to cut your meat for you, parent your children (in French at your request, no less), or mediate an escalating domestic disturbance between you and your drunk wife. If you are too good to treat me with the decency and respect that someone who is the last to handle your food before you eat it deserves, then stay home and cook your own dinner.

rockie horoscope

BRA SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

ow you know the drill. Once Libra starts, it's lunch after lunch, dinner after dinner, l—exhausted by all the celebrations, including those for the other Libras in your —you finally call it quits. Maybe you'll take to your bed, maybe you'll dig up dirt 'll distract your circle of friends. But unless it's truly shocking news (and while your s ruler confronts corrupt Pluto, it very well might be), words alone won't interrupt low of invitations. Better change your shoes and get on with the dance.

CORPIO

TOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

you manage to profit from the down-and-dirty side of s beyond the rest of us. However, it seems that while Pluto coruler in your Sagittarius house of income tests influence of Venus in your house of business associates, ll make out just fine. Who are these people, what ets do they possess, and why are you privy to them? Is ective Jupiter in your sign covering your ass while it eases your assets? This is one of those magical interludes n wishing can make it so, but you only have until nksgiving to open that window of opportunity.

AGITTARIUS

a is usually a pleasant, productive time for the Centaur. get to enjoy a civilized social life, minus the stress of the day season. Plus, there's more art and music available n you can readily absorb. Since so much of the ological activity is centered at the top of your solar rt, attending these events might also give your career a in the arm. Absence may make the heart grow fonder, ough a chance meeting can jog the memory and fuel the tive fires. Have I got a project for you!

APRICORN

might have to explore your unconscious to discover what ently constitutes "buried treasure." The rare trine aspect veen your Saturn ruler in golden Leo and subterranean o in your Sagittarius house of invisible influences is about eward you—or at least support your deepest, darkest onian desires. With Saturn in your house of shared assets attitudes (not to mention a rich sex life), all sorts of itable possibilities can open up. Just don't talk about n with anyone but your closest confidante.

QUARIUS

NUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

ulous Neptune in your sign is attracting so much ntion from other planets (i.e., other people) that you nt as well get with the program and welcome the crowd. e your mind may be stimulated by intellectual ex- ges with Gemini, Virgo or Libra natives, and Arians d goad you into taking action, your best bet is to follow dvice offered by Scorpio and Sagittarius. They're the signs overseeing the course of your career, and their bined wisdom, caution and optimism are the qualities 'll stand you in good stead for the rest of the year.

SCES

BRUARY 19–MARCH 19

for Aquarius and extract as much from the attention paid to your Neptune ruler as applies to your own mstances. It could feel like you're engaged in a "Same , next year" affair—the airy Libra planets have been g court to inspirational Neptune in the sign of the Water- er for more than six years. So, even though Neptune is ed out in your 12th house of the unknown, you should more than an inkling of what you can expect, especially far-seeing Jupiter is adding its 2 cents' worth.

RIES

RCH 20–APRIL 19

your pick—diplomat or dreamer? Stark reality could a detour toward the ephemeral, while your action- ted Mars ruler strikes a mutually beneficial deal with istic Neptune. Artists may find their efforts are being recognized; activists could come closer to attaining a cherished goal. It's all because of Libra's insistence that you cooperate while Mars is in that sign. Dare we suggest compromise? Go ahead; until stubborn Scorpio begins, there's room to wiggle as well as dance.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Beware of the green-eyed monster. Every now and then, when your Venus ruler confronts secretive Pluto as it does this week, you're liable to get really jealous; of whom or what may make little difference. This time around, while Venus is still in hyper-critical Virgo, you might direct your envy at another artist's work, or tie your stomach in knots worrying that a romantic interest isn't paying the sort of attention you need. However, after Venus enters fair-and-balanced Libra at the end of September, the monster should return to the dark place he came from.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Inspiration instead of perspiration. Although you may be busier than the proverbial bee, the next few weeks can be an air sign's dream come true. That's because idealistic Neptune in Aquarius is on excellent terms with all those planets in airy Libra. And they, by reflection, direct their support to your Gemini planets—the third leg of this Grand Air Trine. Try to make the most of this seasonal break from the ups and downs of a daily routine. Take time for art and other stimulating pursuits, social get-togethers and a chance to look for romance. Or better yet, let it find you.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Gentle nudging by three planets in Libra, the sign known as "the iron fist in the velvet glove," can make a significant impact on your domestic scene. If you feel you're being led by an invisible force toward a decision you're not quite ready to make, blame charming Libra and its hospitable ways. However, a heavy workload could become your saving grace, a valid excuse to avoid the pressures at home. We know you've used this excuse before and are confident that you'll use it again, especially when family holidays roll around.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

If you haven't checked off every item (the clothes, the concerts, etc.) on your wish list for the fall, this would be the time to do so. While your sun ruler's trip through discriminating Virgo may have provided the information you need to make the best choices, Sol's transit of graceful, judicious Libra will allow you to proceed without stepping on anyone's toes. Of course, with so much energy focused on inspirational Neptune in your partnership house, you probably won't get much resistance from that quarter anyway.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Sometimes it takes a while—up to three months—before the effects of an eclipse become evident; sometimes not. Therefore, the Sept. 22 solar eclipse, at the tail of your sign, can still mystify you. But others may already be dealing with the loss that often accompanies this new-moon phenomenon. If patience isn't among the Virgin's many virtues, this would be a good time to develop it. To learn how to maintain a cool head and a firm hand when under duress, look to an honor-bound Leo or a stalwart Scorpio. They are potential allies.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

IT'S HOW YOU PLAY THE GAME...

To kick off their annual Jimmy Fund Telethon, WEEI and NESN hosted the Ultimate Pre-Game Party at the Marriott Copley, complete with a silent auction that was enough to give any Boston sports fan a woody and enough hors d'oeuvres to stuff an NFL linebacker.

On hand were the top brass from the local franchises: the Patriots' Bob Kraft, the Red Sox' Larry Lucchino, the Celtics' Wyc Grousbeck and the Bruins' Jeremy Jacobs, who participated in a panel discussion for the edification of such fans and colleagues as Celtics managing partner Steve Pagliuca, sports scribe Michael Holley, broadcasting bigwigs John Dennis and Glenn Ordway, Celtics legend and snappy dresser Jo Jo White, eternally costumed cutie Lynne Smith with her affable other half, Gary, and their son, Charlie, the superphilanthropic Bob and Debbie First, Jimmy Fund boosters Jonathan Auerbach and Carole Charlin, Greek god Stamatis Astras, brunette bombshell Carolyn Casey, and die-hard Texan Red Sox fans David Noble and Leigh Montoya, who flew in from Dallas for the Red Sox–Yankees series and were drooling over all the memorabilia.

For anyone who roots for a Boston team, it was an unusual opportunity to hear what the guys who call the shots have to say, but equally entertaining were exchanges like this one, overheard by the bar, when a guest asked his friend if he was going to marry the woman he was living with.

"I'm not getting married until I want kids," he said.

"And when will that be?"

"I don't know," the friend answered. "But thank god for Viagra."

WHERE'S NAOMI CAMPBELL WHEN YOU NEED HER?

Taking a page from the playbook of America's Next Top Model—with all the attendant bitchiness, narcissism and shameless self-promotion—modeling agent Tonn Cao spiced up Tuesday evenings this summer with a male model search held at Club Café to benefit the Harbor to the Bay AIDS Ride and the Heart Transplant Unit at Children's Hospital.

For eight weeks, aspiring Zoolanders subjected themselves to such grueling and galling tasks as posing in a headstand while wearing a Speedo, and getting judged by audience reaction (meaning that whoever brought the most friends stood a good chance of winning).

One night, for instance, the contestant pool boasted undeniably gorgeous hair stylist Gary Croteau, whose cheerleaders included cover-of-a-romance-novel lookalike Jay Leo, massage therapist Brian Parks and investment guru Rock Whiting, while the crowd also included fashion upstart Daniel Hernandez, webmistress Rafa Delfin, and Mass. General neurologist Dr. David Chen.

"It looks like Halloween, but it's just another Tuesday night at Club Café," said one attendee, while another, referring to a contestant's receding hairline, sniffed, "It's better to be unavailable than bald."

However, nothing could top the catty persiflage onstage, as when one of the judges (a slightly more sibilant version of Simon Cowell) regarded a photo of a contestant wearing artfully smudged mascara and a chain around his neck and said, "This shot says a lot… like I can't breathe."

The finalists included college student Omar Kennedy (presumably because of the way his jeans hang off his hips), but the ultimate winner was Jeremy Corb, who earned $6,000 and the opportunity to humiliate himself further by diving into the world of professional modeling. However, interior designer Peter Turner, who entered the contest on a lark, certainly deserved to win something for losing 28 pounds in four weeks for the sake of the competition.

The crowd being what it was, one guest heard that and said, "I'll bet it was bulimia."

KUMBAYA, ANYONE?

It sounds a bit odd: The first annual Pillow Fight benefit to send kids from Martha's Vineyard to summer camp on the mainland. As one attendee put it, "This place is one big summer camp. Why would anyone want to leave?"

But for the 30 underprivileged island kids, the fundraiser cohosted by the Mark Wahlberg Youth Foundation and the Felix Organization means they'll be able to swat at mosquitos and make s'mores next summer.

Held at the Chilmark home of real estate developer Alan Slatas, the wingding attracted the likes of Darryl McDaniels (the DMC from Run DMC), übercasting agent Sheila Jaffe, her Boston counterpart, Angela Peri, gorgeous blonde filmmaker Christie Cashman, Aerosmith Joey Kramer with the supergroovy Api brother-of-Mark Jim Wahlberg, living d Kenn Karakul with his S.O., home she ping mogul Jim Held, and his sister, üb producer Kathleen, Jordan's furniture ga lionaire Barry Tatelman and the lov Susan, art dealer Diane Jensen and h husband David, gadabouts Bonnie a Merle Berger, sultry siren Tricia McInty (brother of Joey), the ubiquitous Ram and others of a similarly superhip ilk.

The party took place under a big wh tent replete with cocktails and a dinn buffet, and the entertainment incluc singer/songwriter Jennifer Clarke and h husband, Lenny (who MC'd the raffle), well as comic Patty Ross and a perf mance by DMC.

Sadly, though, his set was cut short b noise complaint from a neighbor, but t before he called out for Newton hon Linda Comstock to join him on stage demonstrate booty-shaking.

Meanwhile, anyone who bought a $ raffle ticket received a pillow decora by Chilmark Community Camp kids. the highlight of the evening seemed to the fire juggler, whom an adorable thr year-old named Sam dubbed, "the su very coolest." IB

TRES GENERACIONES

PERSEVERANCIA TRADICIÓN 1873

The beautiful blue agave grows naturally in the Jalisco region of Mexico around the town of Tequila.

That's the way we like it. So that's the way we leave it. Natural. Because that way, our tequila tastes of… well… agave. Pure and simple.

It doesn't taste of pesticides. It doesn't taste of herbicides. And it doesn't have the bitterness that comes from some cheaper production processes, either.

What all this means is that, like all our tequila, Sauza® Tres Generaciones® doesn't require the flavour enhancers that others have to add to mask less pleasant tastes.

Sauza® Tres Generaciones® tastes like tequila should taste. We know you'll enjoy it. That's why you won't find a trace of bitterness.

WELCOMING COMMITTEE

Every couple of years at the IMPROPER, we turn our attention to a subset of the Boston population that many of us once belonged to: newcomers. In this issue, we've got a lineup designed to help new Bostonians understand our great burg (with all its quirks) and build fun lives here.

Finding people to hang out with is top of the list for most newbies; for tips in that area, we consulted some locals who've done it successfully. To love life here, you must also embrace, or at least learn to cope with, the not-so-lovable aspects of the city. So, in the interest of full disclosure, we've neatly catalogued eight of Boston's most annoying traits. (A little collective kvetching is cleansing; when it comes down to it, we're still in love with Boston.)

Finally, staffer Rich Levine got face-to face with a high-profile newcomer, the Celtics' young point guard Sebastian Telfair, on a personal Duck Tour driven one of the team's biggest fans, Red Auerquack.

FASHION ABLE

Congratulations to whoever is responsible for the improvements to the fashion spreads over the past few months. The clothing selections are much more tailored; the lighting is greatly improved; and the shots and angles are more dramatic. Overall, they have a much more polished and professional look and feel more typically associated with larger national magazines. I especially enjoyed the men's spread (Fall Fashion Preview, Aug. 30), which featured clothing that most men would actually wear. The only suggestion I offer is to select more moderately priced pieces. Many of the featured looks could be accomplished with pieces sourced beyond Boston's most expensive shops.

FOR THE LOVE OF FIDO

I was interested to read the article on dog parks in The Word ("Improper Reports," Sept. 13). I thought it was notable that of the seven dog parks mentioned, only two are for public use and completely fenced in. The greater issue here is that the City of Boston is sadly lacking in dog recreation spaces. If readers want to learn more, I encourage them to visit www.bostondog.org to find out what Boston residents are doing to remedy the situation.

THE REAL TRUTH ABOUT LAWYERS

I pick up your magazine primarily to re John Spooner's column, which I alway enjoy. But I have a bone to pick. THE WORD

EDITED BY JOLYON HELTEMAN

Broad Variety

You won't find much in the way of Irish food at Vintage Lounge, the just-opened eatery tucked into the ground floor of the Folio Building, a brand-new 15-story residential high-rise on Broad Street. It's not that chef Corey French harbors ill will toward the likes of shepherd's pie and fish-and-chips. But after scoping out the neighborhood competition, he figured his menu's niche lay elsewhere. "You've got, like, 10 Irish pubs within a two-block radius!" he says. "People have come by and said, 'We've been waiting for something else to open up around here.'"

Of course, given the bereft culinary state of the Financial District's eastern edge, that left plenty of options open—in fact, almost every non-Irish cuisine out there, a surprising number of which show up on French's menu. Sometimes the borrowings are verbatim. The tapas-sized roasted shrimp with lemon, dill and olive oil ($9) is textbook Greek, squash blossoms with wild rice and grits ($9) are authentic regional Southern, and an entrée of grilled lamb with pomegranate, toasted couscous and pickled onions ($23) is a page straight out of any Moroccan cookbook. Elsewhere, French mixes it up fusion-style: scallop ceviche with shiso, cilantro and yuzu (Peruvian + Japanese; $8), lamb meatballs with cinnamon in tomato ragu (Lebanese + Italian; $7) and pan-roasted duck breast with black rice and port-wine reduction (French + Chinese; $26). But unlike the laughable, mannerist free-for-alls that defined the worst of '90s restaurant cooking—the tikka-masala-cajun pizzas that made "fusion" a dirty word—French's combinations evidence an almost minimalist rigor. No fillers here; every ingredient plays a key role. Case in point: Shortribs ($23), slow-braised until fall-off-the-bone tender, are unctuous and earthy enough. But the dish only becomes a masterpiece once French balances those low notes with tart preserved lemon, kalamata olives for piquant saltiness and dried Moroccan spices for a subtle kick of exotic heat.

If the food is a tad high-falutin' (in a good way), the vibe is anything but. The 40-seat dining room may boast white tablecloths, but full-wall windows, hanging lamps resembling upside-down pint glasses and cozy, low-to-the-ground seating in the lounge area lighten the mood, as do the 31 wines offered by the glass (there's a full bar as well). The three flat-screen TVs playing the Pats game underscore the notion that this is a neighborhood restaurant through and through. "L'Espalier is one of my favorite restaurants. Clio is great," says French. "But they're not the types of places I can go to every week. I want Vintage Lounge to be a place you could eat three, four times a week." Vintage Lounge, 72 Broad St., Boston (617-482-1900). —JH

Boston-born comedians Andy Wasif and Rick D'Elia the authors of How to Talk to a Yankee Fan, a prime interacting with the unenlightened that features a f word by former Red Sox pitcher Bill "Spaceman" Wasif and D'Elia discuss their book Oct. 12 at the Barnes & Noble.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: First off, why would you want talk to a Yankee fan in the first place?

Andy Wasif: It's not so much for when you want to to them; it's for situations when you're forced to, lik a friend's barbecue or at the ballpark. It's more a vival guide for when you're in the same air space.

IB: How did you get the idea for the book?

AW: It was 2004, when the Sox were down 3-0 to Yankees, and I had some time to kill before Game was walking around Barnes & Noble and came ac Ann Coulter's book How to Talk to a Liberal, a thought, "Hey, the Red Sox and Yankees are just like mocrats and Republicans—if Ann Coulter can ha bestseller with that concept, so could we. And might even have a few real facts."

IB: Did the fact that most Yankees fans have the vocab of a 7-year-old play much into the planning of this book

AW: Of course. There are only a few phrases the capable of saying, like 26 and 1918—I actually those are the only numbers they know.

IB: You guys offer tips to Yankee fans—advice on de-Y fying themselves. What's the best piece of advice?

AW: Probably a trip to solitary confinement, follc by listening to "Sweet Caroline" over and over agai

IB: Say you encounter a deaf Yankee fan...

AW: I'd try sign language, but I think all Yankee fans or not, can only sign one finger. After that, I think I'd just hold up a photo of Varitek beating the hell out of A-Rod.

IB: If the Yankees somehow manage to win the World Series this year, will you have to release an entirely updated edition?

AW: Without a doubt. With the Sox not making it this year, and New York doing well, old Yankees fans are coming out of the woodwork and giving us loads of... new material. —Rich Levine

Party On... Brookline's Party Favors has a devoted following for its pretty birthday cakes topped with that sugary frosting we all remember from childhood, and now there's more to love, in a retail space that's almost doubled in size. Until the end of the year, the 1,700-square-foot addition will house holiday trappings (Halloween costumes, Thanksgiving decorations, Hannukah and Christmas geegaws in December). But come 2007, the space will transform into a full-service bakery, with most of the desserts baked on the premises. The Times They Are A-Changin'... Good news for Cantabrigians who like a well-poured pint: A recent decision by the Cambridge License Commission should result in more places to wet your whistle on the far side of the Charles. Starting in 1986, the city capped the number of liquor licenses available to area businesses. But a Sept. 28 commission vote has made it easier for establishments to obtain on-premise licenses; in order to qualify, applicants who can't buy an existing license must only prove that their business won't be a nuisance to the neighbors and show a public need for the enterprise. And what do professionals and students need more than a good, stiff drink?

MR. PERSONALITY

Am I cut out for Scientology? A personality test reveals all.

Personality tests always make me feel great. This is because I lie. When a personality test poses a question like, "If you saw a stranded motorist, would you stop to help him before going to a party and entertaining everyone with witty banter while drinking moderately, being a good listener and saving 10 percent of your pretax income?," my answer is always, "Definitely. That's me to a tee." Personality tests—like job interviews, dates or those forms they make you fill out at the doctor's office—are an excellent chance to lie about yourself. It's just a good feeling to pore over your results while drinking your breakfast Scotch and find out that your life really is on track.

But I recently decided to take an honest stab at personality-type insight by taking the Scientologists' free personality test. Per the flyers posted around town, I wanted to do this at the actual Boston Scientologist headquarters in Back Bay, but nobody there answered my e-mail to set up an appointment. That bruised my ego a bit, because the local Scientologists could use a bit of celebrity wattage, and I once appeared on Comcast 8's Sports Pulse With Ed Berliner.

The Scientologists' personality test, the Oxford Capacity Analysis (OCA), doesn't actually have anything to do with Scientology—as far as I know. There are no questions about Tom Cruise or, at the risk of sounding redundant, aliens.

The first question is, "Do you make thoughtless remarks or accusations that you later regret?" I considered the question, and I don't remember many thoughtless remarks that I've regretted. And there are probably quite a few that I don't even remember because I was drunk at the time. I checked "No" and moved on.

A little further down, the OCA asked, "Do other people interest you very much?" That one's easy: No. When I'm at a party or social gathering that requires me to make chitchat, I have to make a conscious struggle to ask questions. I used to think I was shy, but I've come to the realization that I really just don't care. Luckily, I myself am quite interesting or I'd never have anything to talk about at parties.

The OCA isn't just about your social skills, either. It's somewhat obsessed, for instance, with muscle spasms. One such question, "Do you get occasional twitches of your muscles when there is no logical reason for it?," is followed soon after by, "Does an unexpected action cause your muscles to twitch?" I thought back to the bold claim at the beginning of the test, that "If you're not happy with your life, you can find out w and wondered where muscle twitche into the grand scheme of things. Ca flinch my way to the top? Am I twitch my way out of that big promotion? I'd h to wait till the end to find out.

The OCA tests your political leani too. Most of the time that's pretty strai forward, but I balked when I came to question, "Do you consider the moc 'prisons without bars' system a failure might, if I knew what the "prisons with bars" system is. It sounds rather unsecur there a big wall, at least? At any rate, I ured I should go back and change my pr ous "Yes" answer, to the question, "Are usually up-to-date on everyday affairs?"

A lot of the OCA questions seem pr silly, because they reference traits tha common for 99 percent of the populat For example, question no. 91: "Do you get a single thought that hangs aroun days?" Of course. Doesn't everybody? Fo

Enough Belichick Blastin

Every year, the talking heads come out against Bi Belichick, and every year they're wrong.

On Sept. 7, 2003, the Patriots headed to Buffalo for Week 1 of the NFL season and got their asses handed to them in the worst way. Not even the final score of 31-0 could properly express the kind of beating the Pats took. This was no 12-round split decision: It was Nolan Ryan on Robin Ventura; it was Kermit Washington on Rudy Tomjanovich; it was any random 7-year-old girl on A-Rod (I assume). It was embarrassing.

But as horrible as that afternoon was, it's one that New Englanders should always remember—and not just because that image of Lawyer Milloy dancing around after pile driving Tom Brady is tattooed into our brains, or because it was the last time anyone in Buffalo's been happy doing something other than kissing a cousin or eating a 16-inch hoagie (or both). We should remember that game because it marked the beginning of the world's ill-informed obsession with the way Bill Belichick and the Patriots organization do business.

After that Buffalo game, ESPN's Tom Jackson said, "The New England Patriots hate their coach," and he wasn't exactly out on an island when he said it. The consensus was that when Belichick cut Milloy (one of the most popular guys ever to suit up for the team), he lost his players, and the Patriots were history.

Three years and two Super Bowl rings later, and that sentiment is still all you ever hear. The names have changed—it was Milloy and Tebucky Jones in 2003; Damien Woody and Ted Washington in 2004; Ty Law in 2005; and a laundry list of guys like Vinatieri, Givens, McGinest, Branch and, of course, Duane Starks (OK, maybe not) in 2006—but the message remains the same: Belichick's too stubborn and the front office is too cheap. The Patriots are done.

It happens every season, and every season Belichick makes his naysayers look like they should be riding the short bus. But who's counting, right? Well, I am. Here's a breakdown of what's happened when the world bets against Belichick and the Patriots.

Since Sept. 7, 2003, the Pats have been underdogs in exactly 12 regular season games, and over that time they've gone an amazing 8-4. And when you consider that one of those losses (2003, in Washington) was followed by 21 straight wins, it's a streak of games that's absolutely mind blowing.

As a gambler, I love it. The annual dismissal of the Patriots is like Christmas and my birthday wrapped into one big check. But as a fan, I'm not sure what to think. On one hand, it's fun to laugh at the T Jacksons, the Dr. Zs and, most enjoya the Ron Borgeses of the world—the lat day Lt. Frank Drebins who take the every season and always fall flat on t faces; the guys who continue to say, unbearable consistency, that Bill Belich doesn't know what he's doing.

But on the other hand, it's frustratin no end. Sure, it kills me that we're million under the cap yet suit up recei who make me nostalgic for the days of Crittenden and Vincent Brisby, but can't people see that the system wo Why don't they realize that as lon Belichick's on the sideline and No. under center, the Patriots will be OK?

Part of me thinks that a grasp of the P ots' success is isolated to the hundred thousands of fans that have followed team under a microscope for the past years (yet that doesn't explain Borges, w I think the Globe might revive out of a c

It was the fourth quarter, and the I ots' lead, which was once 24-0, had cut to seven. The Jets fans were goin solutely loco, but amidst the insanity screaming and the curses that were flyi our direction, my dad turned to me calmly said, "I kind of feel bad for eve here. They're getting so excited and p bly really think they might win, b both know they don't have a chance. just don't have a clue."

He was right; the Jets fans didn't h clue. And neither does anyone who c ues to doubt Belichick and the Patriot

TOM EVERETT SCOTT

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY GREG HENRY/LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

One of Hollywood's most versatile actors, Tom Everett Scott was born and raised in East Bridgewater and graduated from Syracuse University. After moving to New York, he and several friends founded aTheaterCo, a repertory company that focused on original works. His stage credits include Turnaround, a revival of Dead End, and off-Broadway productions of The Country Club and Touch. Scott first came to Hollywood's attention when Tom Hanks cast him in his feature film directorial debut, That Thing You Do!, and Scott has since gone on to appear in such films as An American Werewolf in Paris, Sexual Life, Attraction, Boiler Room, and The Love Letter. Opposite Meryl Streep, he starred in One True Thing, and he shared the screen with Jack Lemmon and George C. Scott in Inherit the Wind. Currently, he stars as a paramedic in the TNT hit series Saved, and he recently wrapped filming on the romantic comedy Because I Said So with Diane Keaton and Mandy Moore. He's also starting rehearsals for the Broadway play The Little Dog Laughed. Scott lives in Los Angeles with his wife and two children.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, Tom Cruise and Tom Hanks get along fine without three names. What's up with the "Everett" thing?

Tom Everett Scott: There was already a Tom Scott in S.A.G., so I added my middle name and now I'm stuck with it. I was like 22 when I was faced with this, and y'know, some people just deserve three names. It takes a strong man to carry three names.

JS: A giant. So you and I share a birthday: Sept. 7. What Virgo traits are true of you: perfectionist, a little anal-retentive, judgmental, neat freak?

TES: Perfectionist is one I've always heard that I think is true. Neat freak. I can't make a sandwich and leave the stuff out while I eat the sandwich. I've gotta put everything away before I enjoy the sandwich.

JS: Most embarrassing thing you ever did in an audition?

TES: The first time I auditioned for a soap opera, I was reading with the casting director, who was this older woman sitting behind a big oak desk with her glasses on. Anyway, a kiss was written into the scene, so I started walking around to her, and she was like, "Oh, no, no, no! We don't have to do that!" I felt rejected.

JS: What happened to your East Bridgewatah accent?

TES: I lost it, but it comes back when I say things like "ah-thritis" and "kindagahden," words I don't use so often.

JS: What's been the biggest stretch for you as an actor?

TES: Well, I've got a big one coming up. I'm going to be on Broadway playing a closeted movie star, with guy-on-guy love scenes. That's gonna be a stretch, and it's gonna be fun to play a role that's so different from me.

JS: You have that weird kind of fame where people probably recognize you but can't quite place where you're from.

TES: Yeah. It's so rare that someone will actually know all three of my names, and when they do, I basically hug them. But usually what I get is this: I'll go into a store I've never been in, and the person at the register will say, "Oh, you're back." They think they've seen me before but they don't know why.

JS: OK, American Werewolf in Paris—do you regret that?

TES: Not at all! It was one of the greatest summers of my life. I was 25, in Europe for the first time, working and living, doing a big film with lots of special effects. It was great!

JS: But the movie itself was a howler.

TES: These things don't always turn out the way you hoped. At this point in my career, I've learned not to get so hung up about it. Live and learn.

JS: Was that a body double or was that really your butt in American Werewolf in Paris*?*

TES: Oh, yeah. I mean, I'll gladly step aside for a stunt person, because I don't want to get hurt, but something like that? Yeah, that was my butt.

JS: Would you ever do a full frontal?

TES: I'm about to, on Broadway. I'm gonna be completely naked, so buy your tickets now. [Laughs.]

JS: So does Tom Hanks owe his directing career to you?

"I'M HOPING TO GET RECOGNIZED. I NEED THE LIFT. IF I GO SOMEWHERE I'M NOT RECOGNIZED, I'M PISSED."

TES: He probably shelved the directing career because of me. I don't think he's directed much apart from a Band of Brothers episode and an Earth to the Moon episode since That Thing You Do! But I'll always admire the man and be in debt to him for plucking me out of anonymity and putting me where I wanted to be, which is making money as an actor, and as far as his directing goes, he should do it more. He's an awesome director.

JS: In That Thing You Do!, you played a teen dreamboat. Any advice for former boy band members, whose lives seem to turn into train wrecks?

TES: Don't burn those bridges at your favorite restaurant. You might wind up waiting tables there someday.

JS: Your name in that movie was Guy Patterson. Ever use that as a pseudonym to avoid recognition?

TES: Are you kidding? I'm hoping to get recognized. I need the lift. If I go somewhere I'm not recognized, I'm pissed.

JS: On Saved, you play a compulsive gambler. Do you have a problem and should we have an intervention?

TES: No, it's not a problem! I can quit anytime I want! I'll bet you anything!

JS: Are you a risk-taker or an adrenaline junkie?

TES: No, I'm the opposite of that. I really don't like to take risks. I'm a sucky liar and a scaredy-cat and I'm basically a big pussy, but in poker, I get to lie and be risky, which is probably why I like it so much.

JS: Most talented actor you've worked with?

TES: That's such a tough question, because there are so many different things that make someone talented. I definitely was amazed by Meryl Streep's acting. It was an incredible performance, as all of her performances are. She sticks out. But there were so many great things I learned from Jack Lemmon and George C. Scott. Tom Hanks is a ridiculously talented, smart, creative actor.

JS: OK, one actor you'd never, ever want to have a love scene with?

TES: [Laughs.] I can't say because I'll say it and then get cast opposite that person. That would be perfect karma.

JS: How about Ernest Borgnine?

TES: Hey, look, I may have to kiss him at some point. Is he dead or alive?

JS: Thing you miss the most about East Bridgewater?

TES: My mom and dad. I don't hardly ever get to see them.

JS: How often do you Google yourself?

TES: [Laughs.] Is that what they call it these days? The answer is often. Seriously, I did Google myself when I was trying to find the TNT Web site, and it's kinda bizarre.

JS: Well, on the Web site Rotten Tomatoes, your annoying rating is only 43 percent rotten, whereas Ben Affleck is 52 percent rotten...

TES: Hold on a second! That's genius! 43 percent annoying? I love that! I'm definitely going online to see who else I can compare with.

JS: Were you surprised by what a hit Saved turned out to be?

TES: Yes and no. I mean, I was happily surprised that it was, but it's not like I thought it was a dog. I really loved the show.

JS: Like American Werewolf in Paris?

TES: [Laughs.] Yeah, thanks for bringing that up again.

JS: You're such a Boy Scout in real life. Maybe you should get yourself a cocaine addiction or something.

TES: I've been told that if I start shooting heroin, I should inject it under my fingernails so no one can see the marks. I have that as a plan. I could also just start eating badly. I quit doing that recently. I'd look OK naked onstage, and now I want are some f------ French fries and sugar.

JS: Last question: If you weren't an actor, what would you be doing right now?

TES: Probably opening doors at the Plaza. IB

Former North Carolinians Cali and Woody Rich first moved into an apartment in the Back Bay but found the South End better suited their lifestyle.

how to WIN FRIENDS and INFLUENCE PEOPLE (Beantown Edition)

Bostonians are a unique breed; there are right ways (and wrong ways) to approach them if you want to make friends and establish a rockin' social life. Take it from these newcomers who've conquered the scene.

BY ETHAN GILSDORF PHOTOGRAPHS BY KELLY DAVIDSON

Everybody's talking 'bout the new kid in town/Everybody's walking like the new kid in town." Sound like you—social calendar crammed, constantly connected and publicly coveted? Or, a year after uprooting to the Biggest Small Town in America, are you still humming old Eagles tunes on a Saturday night, alone, wondering why your so-called new "friends" never text you?

I've been there.

As a barely-under-the-age-limit 30-something, I relocated to Boston two years ago. Quickly, I succumbed to the newcomer blues. The neighborhood-centered social life seemed impenetrable. Trial and error (mostly error) ruled my efforts at finding pals and hang-outs. For example, I soon learned that work-based friendships often drive the scene. Problem was, I worked from home. In my underwear.

Moving into my Somerville apartment one forlorn December night, I broke my ankle. I was miserable, I knew no one, and I vowed to hate this city with the passion of a million pulsing Citgo signs.

Like any urban nexus, Boston throws up its own funky and frustrating smoke-screen. Yet despite the obstacles, you can become fabulously social without discarding your sports team loyalties or having to fake the Harvard or Dorchester vernacular. Eventually, I did find my peer group of stay-at-home, single freelance writers (and those who'd have a beer with one). If a classic rock–loving, half-naked, washed-up poet can do it, so can you.

The IMPROPER tracked down newcomers who've broken into Boston with aplomb, then arm-twisted them into revealing their secrets which, thank god, amount to more than "join a club." Presenting our foolproof, five-step program for social success.

A transplant from Las Vegas, Marcy Poole (left) quickly diagnosed the Bostonian penchant for honest dealing, no matter how brutal.

Former Manhattanite Matthew Reed Baker (right) found Bostonians' social networks harder to crack than New Yorkers'.

You Are Where You Live

Every Boston neighborhood has its character. Your first priority in getting a social life is to find the 'hood that matches your age and lifestyle, thus maximizing your chances to hang with like-minded folks—if you can afford the rent, that is.

"I didn't realize when I moved here how important your neighborhood becomes and how it can define you," says Marcy Poole, 34, a TV station account executive who came here from Las Vegas. "People in Boston are very interested in where you live, and when you tell them where you dwell you might get a shrug or a nod of approval."

Woody Rich, 29, originally from North Carolina, moved to a Back Bay apartment that seemed quintessentially Bostonian. Then reality hit—namely that "the apartment wasn't big enough to swing a cat in," Rich says. He and his partner, Cali, wanted to feel like they lived in a neighborhood. "The Back Bay is great, but after living through a summer of dodging tourists on Newbury, we were done. The South End seemed more our speed: great restaurants, small specialty shops and a slightly funky feel."

The first place Rosie De Lise, 23, lived with her roommate nine months ago was Medford. "It was nice and quiet and felt safe, but it was really boring!" she remembers. "We were out of the way of anything exciting, and all of our neighbors were families with children." She quickly switched to bustling Harvard Square, and that's made all the difference. "It feels better to be here, because we feel like we're actually part of the social community."

J.P.'s yards and porches feel homey to some. For others, only the lofty-ness of the Leather District bespeaks "city life." Just act your age. If you're pushing 40, your Allston/Brighton roommate phase is probably over. Time to hang up that beer funnel, dude.

Crack the Boston Nut

Generic big city gruffness doesn't entirely explain why approaching people in Beantown can be different. Matthew Reed Baker, 35, a writer from New York, says Boston is full of longtime locals happily settled in their networks. "When I first got here, I felt like I was crashing someone else's cocktail party," he says, whereas New Yorkers are more inclined to invite casual acquaintances to art openings and concerts. "New can be a large and lonely city, but people are there to meet peopl

Boston, she's a harder brewski to pop open, especially for ne with no connections. "A lot of people don't have room in thei for more friends," says De Lise, who relocated here from Platt N.Y. "I've noticed that a lot of Bostonians have this crazy, super-ignore mode they can just go into, and it seems like no can penetrate that. It sort of seems like a survival mode."

Texas native Regan Przybyl, 22, who moved to Brookline Dallas a year ago, discerned a huge contrast right away. "In Bos seems that at night most groups of people keep to themselves remarks. "I'm a Texas girl, and Texans do nightlife a little differently. It wouldn't b common to go to a bar down South and by the end of the night know almost eve there." Bostonians warm up a bit more slowly.

So what do natives respond to, short of ritual sacrifices to the Yankee-hatin "Bostonians say whatever's on their mind, no matter how abrasive it might com And they can smell bullshit a mile away," Poole contends. "It takes a while to accl but the people of Boston respond to 'real' people." In other words, that glitterin fornia grin doesn't fly 'round these parts.

"In some places, people may smile and then say something behind your back Alexandra Mercer, 31, originally from San Diego. "Here, they just wouldn't smil they would say it to your face."

For the homesick, don't despair. Our advice? Try not to keep comparing yo hometown to the new. "We simply try to stay active in what Boston has to offe Rich. Boston's vibe isn't San Francisco's, and it isn't London's either. Appreciate v is—the brainy, brawny and tribal—and try to ignore what's lacking.

Hunt and Gather

Having dogs and babies are no-brainer ways to start conversations with strange what if you're not joined at the leash (or boob) to another creature? Meeting peo be daunting. "This is my fourth major move, and each time I think it will get easie I've had a lot of practice, but it doesn't," says Mercer. "I find myself wanting to re elementary school tactics. 'Want half my cookie?' 'Wanna be my friend?'"

The solution is deceptively simple: Have chutzpah, natter on to your neighbo down barriers. "When you're looking for friends, you have to break out of your c zone," suggests Przybyl.

That means being direct. "I will say that at my age, I'm probably a bit more asking for people's contact info," says Mercer. "And if I think someone is awesom sie Branson Gill, 26, hadn't lived in Medford since she was 18. When noved back last year, one tactic seemed to work wonders: walking. "Mov- om New York City, I missed walking everywhere," she says. "I realized when you travel by foot instead of by car, you develop a far stronger sense ighborhood and community. So, I stopped driving and started walking and riding ."

Texas native Regan Przybyl (left) recommends giving prospective pals a chance, even if you don't immediately click.

Months before relocating from San Diego, Matt O'Neil (right) began building a Boston social network online, through Web sites like Myspace and Facebook.

. Why not? The older you get, the more you know when a relationship is d match."

n outgoing, pavement-pounding philosophy can translate into inviting near- gers over. Just don't refuse invites when they come your way. "Accept invitations to es, dinners, whatever," says Kris Dickson, 33, originally from the Midwest. After ears in Scotland, she lost touch with most of her friends stateside and had to start a l life from scratch. "If you're the person who always says 'Yeah, I'd love to come . maybe next time,' people stop asking."

cal restaurants can also be a breeding ground for meeting new people. "You see the regulars every week," says Marcy Poole. The same goes for concerts, art galleries, halls and gyms.

he hardest part for me is saying one thing to break the ice," admits Adam Duches- , 25, originally from Ithaca and now settled in Brighton. "Once the conversation is ed, I can usually find things to talk about with people." He recommends newcomers t or look for roommates. "This is a great way to meet new people."

n Diego native Matt O'Neil has an even more practical approach. Six months be- moving to the Back Bay this summer, he began online networking. Using Web sites Facebook and Myspace, he contacted friends of friends, and tracked down people he t even know were living in or moving to Boston.

riends would say, 'You gotta take care of this guy moving in,'" says O'Neil, who ed jelly-side-up after only two weeks in town, his social life already in place.

To Be (Yourself), or Not to Be?

ember your first week in college? Finally, a chance for that personality makeover. ot being yourself can be a trap. "I stopped doing anything intentionally unique," Gill. "When I act like myself, quirks and all, I find I build more honest and mature dships than previous ones."

Which doesn't mean a modicum of self-awareness is a bad thing when trying to make a good impression. "[I pay] attention to my body language," says De Lise. "I try to hold myself in a way that would hopefully seem personable and approachable to someone else. If you're a shy person and slouch a lot or look down a lot or generally seem closed off, people are less likely to approach you."

A flexible, anything-can-(and will)-happen attitude helps, too. "It's partly a personality thing. I'm open and like to meet new people," says Steve Johnson, 44, a Somerville teacher who's previously lived in several U.S. cities and Japan. "I know what I have to do to find my way [around]. The ground isn't always solid, but that doesn't have to be a problem." In other words, embrace the chaos of this friend-finding period as much as possible.

Of course, it doesn't hurt to try to fit in. Learning to properly pronounce town names like Worcester, Leominster and Scituate means you won't be labeled an outsider for eternity. Just don't be an idiot. "Don't put on a Red Sox cap, complain about the Big Dig and think that you project the image of a native Bostonian," says Poole.

Patience, Grasshopper

Friendships take time.

"It still took probably six months before I felt like I made some good friends here," Kris Dickson says. Alexandra Mercer sets the bar even higher. "I say it takes a good 10-plus months before someplace can start feeling like home."

Be careful not to scratch folks off your "friend?" list too soon. "When it comes to dating, my mom once told me, 'Go with the creep and look over the crop.' It sort of applied to finding friends as well," advises Przybyl. "Even if you meet someone whom you don't immediately click with, you should still give them a chance."

The growth of social roots into any new city requires patience and persistence. Dickson says she tried several strategies—playing sports, taking classes, going for drinks after work—and recognized that a sense of humor is necessary. Debacles and disappointments are inevitable. "But the disasters are at least good stories later!" she quips. "You have to be the one to make the effort as the newbie."

Above all, Matt O'Neil warns his friend-seeking fellow newcomers against the kiss of death: inertia. "It's going to be all too easy to stay in your apartment all night," he says. "You can't hold back anything. You have to go 'balls out,' just get on the phone and call people."

Just remember to put your pants on. iB

Welcome to our city! are you ANGRY yet?

annoying boston

BY EZRA DYER ILLUSTRATION BY BOB FLYNN

I love Boston; really, I do. We've got world-class restaurants, universities, hospitals and museums. We've got at least one great sports team at any given time. Beautiful beaches and majestic mountains are only a day trip away. Even our oft-maligned airport is ridiculously easy to get to, in comparison with those of just about any other major city. And consider these scenes: a lazy summer day on the Esplanade. Fenway in the throes of some late-inning heroics. Hanover Street in the North End at dusk. The Public Garden in bloom on that first really warm spring day. These are the reasons we live in Boston.

Or, perhaps more accurately, these are the reasons we put up with it.

Because Boston is annoying. Certain conditions you accept, implicitly, when you move here. You know your taxes are going to make the feudal serf system look fair. You know that car insurance rates will require you to regularly sell your body to German businessmen just to keep your '93 Tempo on the road. You're certainly aware that our housing costs are insane, real-estate bubble or not (take it from someone who rented a ratty 660-square-foot apartment in Beacon Hill for $2,100 per month—five years ago). But those conditions of life in Boston are as predictable as Danny Ainge's trading half the Celtics roster by December. What you might not know is that in the strata of Boston's annoyingness, that's just the crust. Grit your teeth with me, then, and let's dig a bit deeper.

ANNOYING FACT #1:
The T Will Confuse You No Matter What You Do.

If you want to get around Boston on the T, you'll need to buy yourself a prepaid Charlie Card. The Charlie Card is imminently convenient, except that it doesn't yet work at all the stations. From now till December, we're in limbo between Charlie and Selma (Selma being our collective name for the token slingers ensconced in their cheerful armored booths). So, should you buy a Charlie Card, a conventional monthly pass, or a fistful of tokens? Since I know so much about Boston, I'll tell you right this sec—hey, look at that unicorn!

Once you've paid for your ride, there are a few other foibles you should know about. First of all, the E trains on the Green Line are an inside joke among Bostonians, because they're the only ones that don't go to Kenmore from Park Street. Really, the E train is nothing more than a form of hazing for newcomers. Many a freshly minted Bostonian, myself included, has zoned out on the train en route to Fenway, only to wind up at Prudential or Symphony, wondering what the hell went wrong. Consider it an initiation rite the first time you sigh in exasperation when an E train comes around the corner at Park Street, because at least you now know not to climb aboard. Ditto the first time you successfully navigate from the Orange Line to the Green or Red Line via the subterranean maze connecting Downtown Crossing and Park Street. There are trolls down there, so be careful. Finally, it takes a while to get your bearings on whether you should head inbound or outbound, depending on your location—determining, as one new arrival termed it to me, "whether you're facing the Mecca of Park Street." Then, sometimes you're on your way through Park Street, and the train abruptly goes out of service. Then there's… OK, we'll stop now.

ANNOYING FACT #2:
Moving Day Is the Worst Time You'll Ever Have.

Everyone's lease in Boston begins and ends on Sept. 1. When I moved to Boston, I found one of the roughly five apartments in the city with an October lease, so I had the luxury of an unfettered move-in. My landlord promptly changed that, however, and when it came time for me to move, I was thrust into the unmitigated hell that is Moving Day.

As if boxing up and transporting all of your possessions isn't tough enough, Boston's en-masse move presents additional challenges. For instance, you might want to buy four skateboards to help move your bed across town, because chances are U-Haul's closest available truck is parked in Nova Scotia. And even if you do score a truck, good luck trying to park it. Sure, you can pay for "moving zone" permits from City Hall, but you can't make people respect them. Bostonians on Moving Day will be deterred from snapping up open parking spaces by nothing short of armed sentries (and possibly not even then). We spit at your "No Parking" sign, silly U-Haul–driving pig-dog!

But, for the sake of argument, let's say you've got a truck and a spot outside your digs. Now all you've got to do is navigate all your surprisingly heavy furniture around the mountains of trash that are a consequence of the collective clean-out. When I moved out of Bay Village, I found myself saying things like, "Hey, could you kick that stack of gay porn to the side? I don't want to trip over it and drop the TV. Thanks, Mom."

ANNOYING FACT #3:
Closing Time Is a Melee.

In cities where the bars stay open till the wee hours, everyone filters out at their own pace. In Boston, bars close at either 1 or 2 am, and the ensuing rush of tipsy patrons onto the street creates a cab crisis of epic proportions. If you remember nothing else from this story, newbie, remember these two tips: Leave 15 minutes before closing time, and if you don't do that, swim upstream.

The first concept is pretty self-explanatory: If you can restrain yourself from indulging in that last 15 minutes before closing time, you'll get a jump on jokers who stick around until the lights come on. Fact: At 12:45 am, there are plenty of cabs. At 1:05 am, they're all taken.

So what to do when you just couldn't tear yourself away from the bar? Walk away from the epicenter of the action. While it's bad form to walk 100 feet up the street from someone trying to hail a cab—in fact, they might sprint up and throttle you over such an indiscretion—if you continue all the way out of their sight, you're in business. For example, to get a cab out of Faneuil Hall at closing time, I once hiked up the Route 93 off-ramp. Worked like a charm. As long as you're willing to push the envelope beyond the next person waiting for a cab, you'll get home. But why not take the T home after hours, you ask? The T don't run that late, Bunky. If it did, that would be convenient and non-annoying, and, as you're hopefully learning by now, that's not how we roll around here.

ANNOYING FACT #4:
The St. James Street Wind Tunnel Blows.

If you live or work around the Hancock Building, you're familiar with the jet stream that rushes down St. James past Berkeley and Clarendon Streets. According to an urban planning–savvy friend of mine, when they erected the Hancock they neglected to study the effect it would have on the local wind patterns. Well, the first time you walk down St. James on a blustery day, you'll notice that its effect is to turn the entire area into the top of Mount Washington. It's not uncommon, outside the Bank of America branch, to witness a garbage tornado churning plastic bags, newspapers and other detritus 20 feet above your head. If you must visit this part of town, squint your eyes, grit your teeth, and try not to trip on the piles of broken umbrellas. Or, take those lemons and make lemonade, as did one bike courier spotted recently sailing down St. James. I don't mean he was sailing in the sense that he was pedaling quickly. He had a makeshift sail strapped to his bike.

ANNOYING FACT #5:
The Weather's Even Worse Than You Think.

You know Boston's not San Diego, but until you've spent a full year here you can't comprehend what you're in for. Last winter was unusually warm and pleasant by Boston standards, and we still had a storm in which thunder, lightning and a whiteout blizzard all occurred simultaneously. You didn't think lightning and snow could happen at once? I scoff at your naiveté. And, like I said, last winter was a peaceful one, the kind of winter where, instead of being abjectly cold and miserable, you're just constantly apprehensive about when the miserable time will finally descend. Twice in the past five years, I've seen my car buried in snow so deep that it was only a vague, car-like shape under a thick white blanket. And two years ago, we had a cold snap of such duration that someone spit a loogie on the sidewalk outside my office ar stayed there, frozen, for two weeks. Welcome to Bost

ANNOYING FACT #6:
You Need a Law Degree to Decipher Our Parking Signs.

Here are the parking rules, just on one block of my st Resident parking only, 6 pm–10 am, Monday to Friday most of the spots. Then there are a few spots designate visitors. Those have a two-hour limit. So a nonresi could park in one of those spots at 8 am Friday mor and stay there until 2 am Monday morning. Of course one side of the street you have street cleaning from 8 a 12 pm on the first and third Thursday, from April 1 to 30. On the other side, same deal, but on the second fourth Thursdays. You've also got a fire hydrant a handicapped space. And there's a space between driveways that's perfectly legal, but where I neverth once received a ticket. I peeled it off my windshield marched over to a state trooper parked nearby and as "Is that a legal space, where I'm parked?" "Oh, definit he replied. "I park my car there all the time." So, on one block, you've got to consider resident/nonresident ing distinctions, street cleaning, a fire hydrant, a ha capped space and a space that confuses even the ticket-writers (my ticket was dismissed). I'm afraid this nario is pretty representative of everywhere in Boston certain neighborhoods also have their own quirks.

For instance, in Brookline you can't park on the s overnight, a rule that goes back to the town's inceptio you see, back when people rode horses, the parked h would get in the way of the nightly door-to-door w burnings, and that's why in 2006 you can't leave Camry at a meter overnight. Fine—I made that up. I'm sure there's an equally reasonable explanation, I'd go to Brookline and research it if it wasn't so ha park over there.

ANNOYING FACT #7:
Pedestrians Have Right of Way. And You Can That to the Friends You Make in Heaven.

Boston has this hilarious practice that makes people pretty darn silly. What we do is—snort! cackle!—ri "Walk" signs so that they're lit at the same time cars a green light to turn across that intersection. If you'd to see this awesome system in action, go to the inte tion of Mass. Ave. and Boylston Street and watch th jinks that ensue as drivers try to turn onto Boylston, to the Berklee College of Music. According to Be professors, fully 65 percent of the original music wr by students is about getting hit by cars. Sample l "Got hit by a Lexus today/ Had a lit walk sign/ Now some shattered vertebrae."

ANNOYING FACT #8:
Happy Hour Isn't So Happy.

I suppose this isn't just a Boston thing, but a New land thing. One random, unexpectedly poetic skier Killington once remarked to me, "Happy Hour in England is a eunuch who's three feet tall." Wh meant by that is, you may see Happy Hour specia they apply only to food, not alcohol. I appreciate th ture represented by cut-rate afterwork nibblies (I've a few dinners that consisted of nothing but the 10 wings at Whiskey's), but the lack of a proper happy gets filed under "Reasons Boston is still uptight 200 after the Puritans," along with "Only two strip clubs "No open containers." Speaking of which, I've h Writing this story has underscored a very importan ization for me. When you've had it up to here, get town for a few days. Whatever's wrong with B chances are it's right with Vegas. IB make way for telfair

The Celtics' new point guard felt lost in Boston, so we put him on a Duck Tour to help him find his way.

BY RICH LEVINE PHOTOGRAPH BY MICHAEL MALYSZKO

Early last month, Sebastian Telfair was in the market for a new TV. Hell, he was in the market for a new everything, having just moved to Boston after being acquired by the Celtics in a June trade. But like most 21-year-olds, Telfair's got his priorities. So he called up teammate Gerald Green for directions to the nearest Best Buy. Forty-five minutes and a freightload of frustration later, Telfair finally made it to the Watertown store, but not without learning an important fact about life in his new city: When you're driving in the Boston area, nothing's easy.

It's one of many lessons Telfair will need to learn before he's completely adjusted to life in the Commonwealth, but between raising his 11-month-old daughter at home and helping return the Celtics to NBA relevance on the court, how's a guy supposed to find time to get comfortable in a new city? We wanted to lend a hand. So on a Tuesday afternoon in mid-September, we accompanied Telfair on a private Duck Tour around town, aiming to get acquainted with one of Boston's higher-profile newcomers and help a kid who was once the King of New York become one with his new city.

Sebastian Telfair isn't your typical third-year pro. He made the jump to the NBA straight out of high school in 2004—when the Portland Trailblazers drafted him with the 13th pick overall—and did so amidst more hype than anyone in recent memory not named Lebron. The Coney Island native graduated from Brooklyn's Lincoln High School as New York State's all-time leading scorer, was the first player to ever win three New York City PSAL titles and had earned a faithful following of fans like Spike Lee, Derek Jeter and Jay Z. Before he was even 18, his life was already the subject of a book, The Jump: Sebastian Telfair and the High-Stakes Business of High School Ball, and the centerpiece of the award-winning documentary Through the Fire. He was, and still is, a legend on the streets of New York City. But none of that meant much when he got to the NBA.

Imagine the worst possible place for an 18-year-old kid to start out on an NBA career. Now imagine worse. That was Portland. The Trailblazers—or the Jailblazers, as they've been dubbed, thanks to management's uncanny ability to acquire players of questionable character and lengthy criminal records—were a mess, and Telfair struggled through a number of injuries, a few off-court issues and a glut of competition at the point guard position. Then this summer, after two full seasons, Portland sent Telfair and his undeniable potential to Boston.

With the West Coast firmly in the past, Telfair's present is Boston, and at this moment, the present is a seat in the back of our Celtic-green duck boat. He wastes no time expressing how happy he is to be back east.

"Don't get me twisted on Portland," he says, "I loved it there, because when you get a chance to play in the NBA, it doesn't matter where they put you. But everyth about being here is better. I'm so close to my family; only a three-hour drive or a 40-minute flight. They'll able to come up and see me play so much more. P when I was out there all the games came on at 10:30 Now almost every night we're gonna be on at 7 pm primetime."

We hit the road a little after 4 pm, an ideal Duck To ing time if you enjoy sitting in traffic, but today luck is our side and we make quick progress to Faneuil H where Red Auerquack, a crazed Celtics fan and toda guide, fills Telfair in on the basics. "This here is the old commercial block in the city," he says. "It was built in 1700s and you can see what it's all about today: We go bar… a bar… a bar… and a bar." It's a welcome sight fo kid who turned 21 in June, though he doesn't plan overdo it. "Yeah, it's nice to get out a bit," he says, "b like spending a lot of my time at home."

Cruising around the outskirts of the Financial Distr we make a quick pass by the original Statehouse, bef turning down Tremont towards the Common. As we proach Boylston Street, the conversation turns to Telf boy Jay Z's new album, and if he ever thought Jay's ret ment would hold up (never a chance), when we're in rupted by the blasts of a car horn, courtesy of a resid jackass who apparently thinks our duck is motionless reason (we've stopped for a red light)—the perfect introduction to Boston drivers' attitude.

As we pull down Charles Street and around the Common, we talk about the insane sports culture Telfair's about to be a part of, about how little it takes for the city to rally around one of their teams and how if the C's can manage to put something together this season, he'll experience a level of fandom he never could have imagined. "Man, I just know this is the place for me. I can't tell you how excited I am for this season right here. There's nothing like walking into a sold-out arena and knowing that they're all there to see you play. That's what I want to experience."

If those dreams are ever to become a reality, Telfair knows he and his teammates have some work to do. The Celtics have lost nine of their last 12 playoff games and last year missed the postseason entirely for the first time since 2001. And though Paul Pierce is now entering the prime of his career (a horrifying reality for defenders throughout the league-wide), the window of opportunity for him to lead the Celtics back to the promised land narrows with each passing year. Telfair, though, seems unconcerned with the team's recent problems.

"If you look at some of the other competition in the East, I'd definitely say we're a playoff team," Telfair says. "We've got a lot of young talent, we've got some veterans that are gonna come in and play a lot, and then we've got our All-Star. We put our pieces together in the right way, and we're gonna be a tough team."

The veterans on this year's team are at the very least serviceable. The All-Star? Phenomenal. But it's that "young talent" that Telfair speaks of—and that Boston fans have obsessed over for the past two seasons—that will make or break the 2006-2007 season. Will this be the year that Telfair, Kendrick Perkins, Ryan Gomes, Al Jefferson and Co. finally outgrow the "future star" label and emerge as bonafide stars? Again, Telfair is optimistic. He speaks of the connection he has with many of the younger guys: He, Al Jefferson and Kendrick Perkins grew up playing together in All-Star games, summer camps and AAU tournaments all over the country; he refers to Gomes as "unstoppable"; and he and Green, who were inseparable this past summer at the Vegas Summer League, have carried their friendship over to the Boston. "G-Money, that's my guy right there," Telfair says.

We're now at the tail end of our tour, and motoring around the Charles River under the guidance of Captain Telfair, who's taken over the wheel. He still has everything to prove at the NBA level, and he seems sure that Boston's the place where he'll finally do it. Let's hope he's right, because there's only one form of payment we're willing to accept in exchange for showing him around town: a trip back to the playoffs. iB

THE CLASS OF '06

Here's a look at some of the other new names and faces you'll see on the local sports scene this fall

Laurence Maroney

running back, New England Patriots

They used to say Bill Belichick would never use a first-round draft pick on an offensive skill position—until, that is, he selected Maroney out of the University of Minnesota with the 21st overall pick last April. So far this season, you can see why Belichick broke the mold. The dreadlocked dynamo already has New England buzzing with his combination of speed, agility and stiff arms, and he seems all but destined for NFL stardom.

Stephen Gostkowski

kicker, New England Patriots

Adam Vinatieri missed eight field goals in 1996, his first season with the Pats, so let's have a little patience with Gostkowski, a rookie kicker out of Memphis. The kid's got a super-strong leg, as evidenced by the already impressive number of touchbacks he's racked up on kick-offs, and as his confidence grows so will his field-goal-kicking efficiency.

Zdeno Chara

defenseman, Boston Bruins

The Bruins made headlines this summer when they signed the 6'9", 260-pound Chara, known to casual hockey fans the last couple years only as "that really tall guy on Ottawa," to a five-year, $37 million contract. The 29-year-old Czech—and new team captain—should up the defense for a revamped Bruins team that looks to rebound after an extremely disappointing season, even by Bruins standards.

Dave Lewis

head coach, Boston Bruins

After 20 years with the Detroit Red Wings (an organization that knows something about winning), first as a player and then as a coach, Lewis became the 27th head coach in Bruins' history when the team hired him last June. He led the Red Wings to two Central Division titles (2003 and 2004) and enters this season with an overall record of 96-41-21-6 behind the bench.

Rajon Rondo

point guard, Boston Celtics

Telfair's main competition at that point guard position, Rondo came to the Celtics via the 21st pick in last summer's draft. Rajon played two seasons at the University of Kentucky before jumping to the NBA, and he should provide the C's with a spark off the bench with his defense and overall quickness. His jump shot is a source of concern, but with Paul Pierce and Wally Szczerbiak on the floor, shooting shouldn't be an issue for this team.

A primer for the solitary diner

BY CARMEN NOBEL
PHOTOGRAPH BY REENA BAMMI

There's this memorable scene in the 1984 comedy The Lonely Guy. Steve Martin, playing the title character, walks into a swanky restaurant and requests a table for one. A shocked hush befalls the room. A spotlight shines upon him. It's awful.

While it's only a movie, the sentiment rings true. Even in real life, even in pragmatic New England, the prospect of conspicuous solitude in a crowded restaurant is scary for Boston newcomers (as well as natives). But that shouldn't stop you from taking yourself out in one of America's best restaurant cities. Sure, it's easier to sit on the floor of your new apartment, surrounded by moving boxes, scarfing takeout pizza. But you're going to like yourself and your meal a lot more if you bite the bullet, pick up the phone and reserve a table for one. What follows are some tips to make your solitary dining experience happy, delicious and satisfying. Welcome to Boston. Now get off the couch and eat something decent!

Go out on a date with your laptop.

Most places that welcome solo diners also welcome their laptop computers. Hop online and you're no longer alone. Nobody's alone on the Internet.

Plenty of cafés in the Boston area offer both comfort food and free wireless Internet connections. On a recent Tuesday evening at Darwin's Ltd., a café-cum-sandwich shop near Harvard Square, the crowd comprised one couple and 11 unaccompanied customers. Six of them had laptops, taking advantage of the Wi-Fi. Most of them were bopping absently to the background music—the album Thriller, in its entirety. Other than the couple, nobody was talking. Everyone looked very comfortable, together in their aloneness, eating and typing, spilling egg salad and tea onto their keyboards.

"A lot of single people come in and stay for the free Wi-Fi," says Jimmyhank Williams, a barista at Darwin's. "Every so often they talk to each other. It's a popular place and people get to know each other… but it's not a meat market, for sure."

Some eateries that offer free Wi-Fi:

- Trident Booksellers and Café in Boston
- Darwin's Ltd. (both locations) in Cambridge
- Other Side Café in Boston

Bring some reading material/write some reading material.

Of the inanimate objects that can keep you company at a table for one, a book is a nice option. It doesn't completely shut you out the way an iPod does, and it's not flat-out rude like a cell phone. If you're concerned that it's bad form to read at the dinner table, fear not.

"Years ago I interviewed restaurateurs across the country to ask if there was a stigma," says Marya Charles Alexander, editor and publisher of Solodining.com, who's been researching solo dining for more than 15 years. "No matter whether they were fine-dining or casual places, the general consensus was that if it made the diner more comfortable, it was fine."

If you want to turn a book into a social opportunity, then read what other people are reading. Several area libraries host programs that encourage patrons to read the same book. Brookline's selection for 2006 is Snow

A solo diner with a notebook looks like a reviewer.

Flower and the Secret Fan by Lisa See. Folks in Arlington and Cambridge are reading Mountains Beyond Mountains by Tracy Kidder.

You can use solo nights out to work on a book of your own, too. Look around and make up stories about your fellow diners. The nun and the cowboy sharing oysters in the corner? The tweed-clad professor and his jailbait mistress? Hey, is that John Malkovich? See? There are stories everywhere. Whip out a notebook and jot them down. Or just pretend to jot them down. A solo diner with a notebook looks like a restaurant reviewer; you may even get really, really good service that night.

If you don't have a pen, then you can give your friends a text-message play-by-play. But keep the phone out of view, set it to vibrate, and don't make any calls.

Suggested reading material:

- The IMPROPER. Duh.

Where to find your muse:

- The Zephyr Lounge at the Hyatt Regency in Cambridge, during the Arisia sci-fi convention: Jan. 12-14, 2007.

Sit at the bar.

This is a good way to ease into solo dining. A seat at the bar feels like less of a commitment than a table for one. You can watch the game on TV. You can eavesdrop on conversations and, if you're bold, you can join in. (Couples who choose to sit at the bar wouldn't have done so if they really wanted privacy.) Need a conversation starter? Ask your fellow bar-sitters for menu suggestions. The bartenders are right there for a conversation, too.

"One good sitting-at-the-bar activity is doing the crossword puzzle and getting input from the bartender and fellow bar-sitters," says Frances Marshman, a public health consultant from Somerville who enjoys eating alone.

Don't be offended if the bartender is too busy serving drinks to talk. If you find yourself alone at a bar with a bartender who still won't talk, then you should be offended. But that probably won't happen.

Some restaurants offer separate menus for the bar and the main dining room. If you're planning to eat from the main menu at the bar, it's a good idea to call ahead and make sure that's an option.

If you're going solo at a diner, sit at the counter with the sports section and watch the eggs fry.

"When I first got to Boston I ate in, mostly because I was poor, but I did always treat myself to breakfast out on Saturdays," says Byron Seese, a graphic designer in Boston. "Greasy eggs at a crowded counter, rubbing elbows with complete strangers… it made me feel like I was a part of the city."

Restaurants with cozy bars:

- Franklin Café in Boston
- Legal Sea Foods at the Prudential in Boston
- Tremont 647 in Boston
- The Monday Club Bar at UpStairs on the Square in Cambridge
- West Side Lounge in Cambridge

Go to a hotel restaurant.

Some of the best restaurants in greater Boston are attached to hotels, which is a boon for you. While they attract plenty of discerning locals, these places thrive on the business of hotel guests, who are often in town for work—by themselves. That means a couple of things. One, you won't be the only one in the joint flying solo. Two, the staff will know how to treat you. Eating at the bar is almost always an option in a hotel restaurant, but if you dare try the main dining room in one of these places, you'll be treated with practiced respect.

"If [solo guests] do eat in the dining room, we try not to seat them near larger groups," says Tiffany Taylor, a manager at the venerated Rialto, in the Charles Hotel in Cambridge. "In general, we try to go out of our way to accommodate single diners."

Books and even laptop computers are welcome in Rialto's dining room, but if you'd rather talk, the staff is ready. "We'll send a manager over to chat, or Jody [chef Jody Adams] will stop by the table if she's here," Taylor says.

Some friendly hotel restaurants:

- Bar 10 at the Westin Hotel in Boston
- Bonfire at the Park Plaza Hotel in Boston
- Rialto at the Charles Hotel in Cambridge

Don't get drunk.

"The lone diner who is hammered is not attractive," says Ondine Brent, directrice of Miss O's Charm School, which teaches manners to Bostonians.

It's fine to have a cocktail to ease your solitude jitters, but know your limits. You want to have your wits about you when you're by yourself. And it's not like you're trying to get yourself drunk and seduce yourself.

This doesn't mean you can't enjoy wine with your meal. Most restaurants offer plenty of good wines by the glass and by the half bottle. A good server will routinely point these out to the single diner. But if that Eroica Riesling comes in a full bottle only, order it anyway. Who's going to stop you? Solodining.com's Alexander suggests you enjoy a glass or two, and then use the opportunity to curry favor with the restaurant staff.

"Send back the rest of the bottle to the chef with your compliments," she says. "You'll be remembered."

An alcohol content primer:

- Victory Prima Pils pilsner: 5.3 percent alcohol
- 2004 PineCrest Pinotage: 14.5 percent alcohol
- Ketel One Citroen: 40 percent alcohol

Sit at a communal table.

Several restaurants in Greater Boston sport one or two communal tables, long or round, which seat 12 or more diners. Generally they host a mix of singles, couples who don't mind sitting near singles, and groups who neglected to reserve a table. (Some restaurants offer nothing but communal tables; this is the case with many of the dim sum places in Chinatown.)

More often than not you'll be joining a group of friendly foodies who share your appreciation for the cuisine at hand, and who'll welcome conversations about the meal. If you're timid about the prospect of sharing a table with strangers, check the restaurant's calendar (or the calendar listings in the IMPROPER) for scheduled wine dinners or other special events that encourage strangers to interact. Radius in Boston hosts cooking classes, for example.

If you do sit down only to find you're flanked by twosomes casting furrowed brows at you, don't worry about it.

"The banquet seating can be very uncomfortable because you have couples on either side of you, cheek to jowl," says Alexander. "If they look uncomfortable sitting next to you, then take out a book and smile at them. That will disarm them. They're only uncomfortable if they think you're uncomfortable. They just need to know you're OK."

If you're without a book, "don't be afraid of eye contact," says Miss O's Brent. "That doesn't mean stare people down, but if you look uncomfortable about eating alone, then people will be less likely to engage you."

Some restaurants that encourage (or force) communal dining:

- Radius in Boston
- Stella in Boston
- Toro in Boston
- Matt Murphy's Pub in Brookline

Make a reservation.

If you'd rather secure an actual table for one, then make a reservation. It'll lessen the time you have to sit alone in the lobby. It'll give the staff the opportunity to prepare, meaning you won't have to watch the waiter kill off all the other place settings at your table. And the manager will know to watch out for you.

Calling the restaurant is also just a good opportunity for reconnaissance work. If you can hear disdain or incredulity on the other end of the line, then you can hang up and call elsewhere.

What to request, other than a table for one:

- A table by the window, so you can watch the world go by while you dine
- A conversation with the sommelier
- A cab

Don't be cheap.

Nobody expects you to eat for two, but if you want to endear yourself to the restaurant, order a full meal, especially if you're sitting at your own table.

"If you want to establish yourself as a good diner right off the bat, don't order appetizers and water," says Lara Gavigan, a server at Taberna de Haro, a Spanish restaurant in Brookline. When asked about favorite solo diners recently, several staff members at the restaurant fondly mentioned a guy named George. George orders a full bottle of wine.

Some places where it's OK to ask for nothing but water:

- In the Boston marathon
- At the urologist's office
- On a life raft

Relax.

"I always try to remember that Europeans are just fine being by themselves because they know enough to sit back, savor, sip," says Marshman.

The nicest thing about dining alone is that your only concerns are yourself and your meal. Nobody's going to tell you to lay off the butter. Nobody's going to make you look bad by ordering his steak wicked well-done or his parsnips in chronological order. As a bartender at Brookline's Washington Square Tavern notes, "I've seen people on dates who wished they were alone." Order dessert, smile and be glad you are. IB

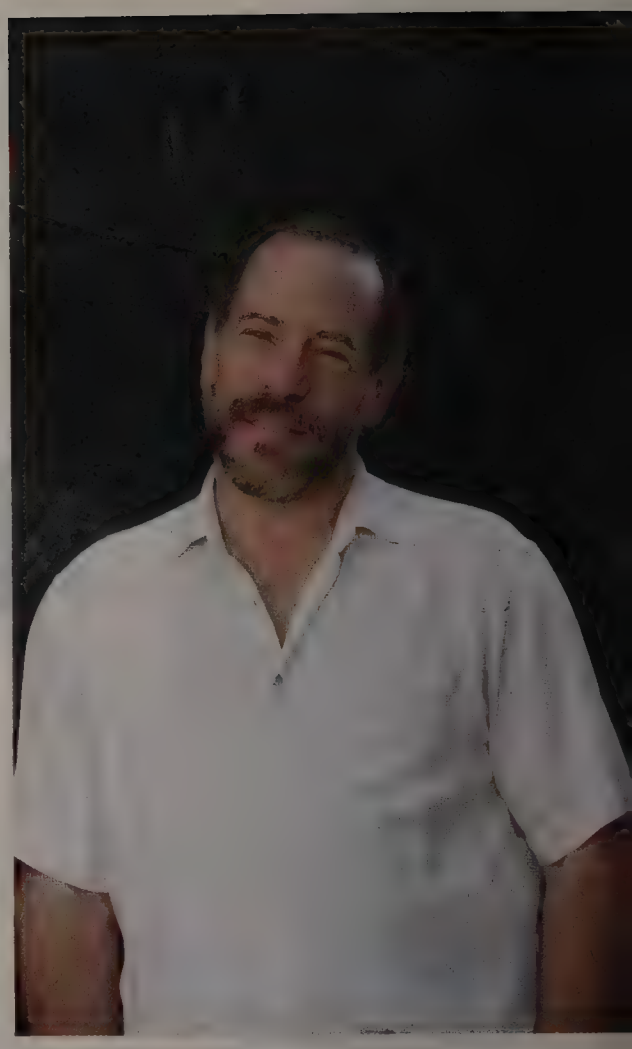
FROM SOUP TO BONSAI

Pemberton Farms (2225 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-876-2711) is a huge farm and garden center, with a greenhouse, take-out food, prize-winning sandwiches and a specialty grocery store, along with some organic produce.

Nature bursts forth here in every direction, so it's only logical that it's a natural food store, too. Outside, plants trimmed like luscious hairdos greet the street; Thanksgiving brings pumpkins and, after that, Christmas trees and wreaths. That earth-abundance continues on indoors, year-round, in the greenhouse, featuring tall plants like the cactus pencil with its busybody branchings, colorful hibiscus, chubby jade plants, various short, cute bonsai numbers and lolloping ivy. Among the produce, some organic and mainly Mass.-grown, you'll find such exotic variations as purple carrots with their bruised beauty, white nectarines, spicy arugula and the essence of autumnal reminiscence—Concord grapes. Their prepared foods include rub-flavored steak tips, grilled corn, roasted eggplant, delicate fish cakes and garlicky sautéed kale, none too expensive. Local bakeries offer almond-raspberry tarts and chocolate macaroons (a sampling plate will sell you on them); or you can do as the takeout-ers and take a pull from a frozen yogurt machine. Then, what seem like miles of aisles offer endless lines of oils, sauces and condiments. Every ingredient has merrily married some staple, bringing on flavor craziness and ingenious combinations: porcini mushroom olive oils (or white truffle), fruited horseradish delight, black fig vinegar and so forth. Bring your own bottle and replenish oil thriftily.

THERAPEUTIC DANCE OF THE MUSCLES

Richard Green is one of 14 massage therapists at Massage Therapy Works Inc. (617-684-4000; www.massagetherapyworks.com).



With his strong, warm, capable hands working on, say, your troubled neck bone (connected to the achey shoulder bone…), Richard Green speaks in a lively way to—and about—your muscles and ligaments: "Your shoulder will have a different sense of itself afterwards," he says. With numerous massage skills at his fingertips (craniosacral, reiki and deep tissue, among others), Green specializes in integrative bodywork therapy, a treatment for pain—perhaps born of injury, or that hunched keyboard-crouch we're all guilty of, or some other needlessly tortured position—that consists of complex movements, pressings, scrunchings and extending actions you can't do yourself, ranging your motion into exhilarating new territories. For a watchful, wounded arm, this is like finding out your house has some extra empty rooms. Ballroom dancing gave Green a metaphor of mutuality—leading and following—and of graceful flow. Integrations include gathering emotional, body-historical information about the soul of the body he's working on. Green aims to restore balance, literal and actual. He thinks in term head-to-toe waves of energy, like pebbles rippling in a pond, and of the new and improved informat sent to the brain stem once loosening and expansion have occurred. RAW POWER

The Back Bay's hot, hip Douzo blends style and substance.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Upon surveying the local restaurant landscape, Dorothy might well exclaim, "Toto, I don't think we're in Boston anymore." It may not be Oz, but Boston's current dining scene is a far cry from boiled scrod and baked beans. The Athens of America, at once cosmopolitan in aspiration and parochial in instinct, has been invaded by successive waves of entrepreneurial chefs and restaurateurs bringing rich and different, often exotic, culinary traditions. They've encountered what seems to be almost unlimited enthusiasm and demand for the cuisines of the southern and eastern hemispheres. While there have long been Japanese restaurants in Boston, their number has increased dramatically, and sushi can now be found in almost as many neighborhoods as pizza. Enter Douzo.

Just south of the Back Bay train station on Dartmouth Street, Douzo inhabits a multitiered space designed to furnish a comfortable and chic dining environment. Large windows dressed with sheer draperies reach up to the 20-foot ceiling. The upper level of the restaurant, near its entrance, contains a lively bar and high cocktail tables. (Between the ambient noise and steady stream of music, Douzo may not be the place to go if you're looking for quiet conversation.) Three steps down, the sunken dining room is divided into a portion that seats about 20 at booths and banquettes, and, beyond a low partition, a portion twice the size, with tables, chairs, banquettes and a charming, segmented semicircular booth. Indirect lighting built into a fabric-covered wall across from the windows radiates upward. A small sushi bar, also on the lower level, has eight stools where sushi lovers can watch the knife-wielding wizardry of skillful chefs attired in black from shirt to round, truncated toque. Hanging from the ceiling, two huge rectangular structures contain non-functioning light fixtures—the staff said they haven't worked since the place opened—unfortunately filling in an obtrusive fashion a large part of the open space created by the high ceiling.

I forgot this design quibble, however, once I got to the food. Navigating Douzo's long, complex menu took some work but yielded considerable dividends. Cold starters included naruto ($7.75), crabstick and shrimp rolled in thinly sliced, peeled cucumber with spicy mayonnaise, a delicious way to begin this voyage. The cool, refreshing crunch of cucumber, sweetness of crab, and pristine, fresh flavor and crisp resilience of shrimp embodied the pleasant contrasts of taste and texture that were replicated in many of Douzo's offerings, while the spicy mayonnaise added a tangy fillip. Ohitashi ($4.50), four or five cylindrical slices of compressed but light and delicate spinach, arrived refrigerator-cold, the temperature muting its flavor. Fortunately, a tasty tahini sauce came to the rescue.

The last cold starter I tried, Kobe beef tartare ($20), didn't live up to my expectations. A small (less than 1 inch high and 2 inches across), flat-topped pyramid of coarsely chopped beef combined with he and diced savories, the tartare had be laced with chili so liberally as to mask flavor of the beef. At that price, for w must've been between one and two oun of beef, the last thing you'd want to d mask the flavor.

Before moving to the sushi, clearly main event, we detoured into Dou kushiyaki (skewers of grilled meat, seaf and vegetables) and tempura. The most miliar embodiment of kushiyaki is yaki (grilled, skewered chicken). Douzo's v sion was first-rate, consisting of two sm but succulent morsels of chicken dippe barbeque sauce and grilled over a hot f resulting in a sweet-savory experien Skewered shrimp ($3.25), pepper onion, shiitake mushroom, and zucch and eggplant (each $2) followed suit, w the zucchini the most successful—g crunchy texture and lively flavor—and eggplant least, because of its mushy text Tempura, a cooking method that Japanese learned from Portuguese missi aries in the 16th century, puts a premium artful presentation, fresh ingredients skill in the kitchen to produce items t are light and fresh rather than ponder and oily. The quality of the batter—e flour and water beaten into a froth fi with small bubbles—makes a tremend difference, as does heating good, fresh co ing oil and keeping it at a constant temp ture to turn out crispy, hot and fresh t pura. Douzo has mastered the techni While the individual tempura items l lected, avocado ($2.50) and Japanese ($3.50), didn't excite me—the avocado curiously flavorless, and the yam not m better—the quality of the cooking t nique promised good things to come in combination rolls built around tempur gredients. The shiitake mushroom tem roll ($2) combined the distinctive sertive flavor of shiitake, the crunchy ture and neutral, fresh flavor of the pura batter, and the rich, unique, swe robust flavor of a sauce rendered grilled eel. tably crunchy raw zucchini. The snow ountain roll paired shrimp tempura with ldly sweet, delicate snow crab.

My favorite among Douzo's special rolls, wever, did not involve tempura. The terpillar roll ($11.75) proved a visual d gustatory delight, with unagi (grilled shwater eel) alternating with segments crisp cucumber, silky avocado and tiny, unchy tobiko (flying-fish eggs) com- ned into a tactile and taste bud–tingling nsation. The defining ingredient of the terpillar roll, unagi, stands among my fa- rite items in the Japanese culinary non. Its rich flavor and interesting tex- re (often crisp on the outside but soft thin) stem from being grilled over hot arcoal, steamed to remove excess fat, asoned with a grilling sauce, then grilled econd time (some regional variations spense with the steaming step). In pan, restaurants that specialize in grilled l can be found by following one's nose, ace a delicious aroma wafts from the arcoal-grilled-eel house.

Douzo's sushi, fresh in appearance and flavor, came constructed with nicely balanced rice, with just the right amount of vinegar. I tried six varieties of sushi: maguro (tuna, $5.50); sake (salmon, $4.75); hamachi (yellow tail, $5.50); suzuki (striped bass, $4.50); unagi (freshwater eel, $5.50); and anago (saltwater eel, $6.50). The freshwater eel and salmon took top honors, followed by the yellow tail, tuna and sea eel, with the slightly fishy-tasting striped bass a step below that. The satiny texture of the salmon and its fresh, natural flavor presented a perfect contrast to the dark, robust, full flavor of the freshwater eel that lingered on my tongue.

All in all, Douzo makes an exciting contribution to the dining and social resources of the Back Bay/South End. So long as you don't detour too long at the bar and confine your drinks to beer or house sake ($8 for an 8-ounce carafe), you can have a tasty dinner at Douzo without breaking the bank, while enjoying one of the most happening scenes in Boston restaurantdom. Look Sharp

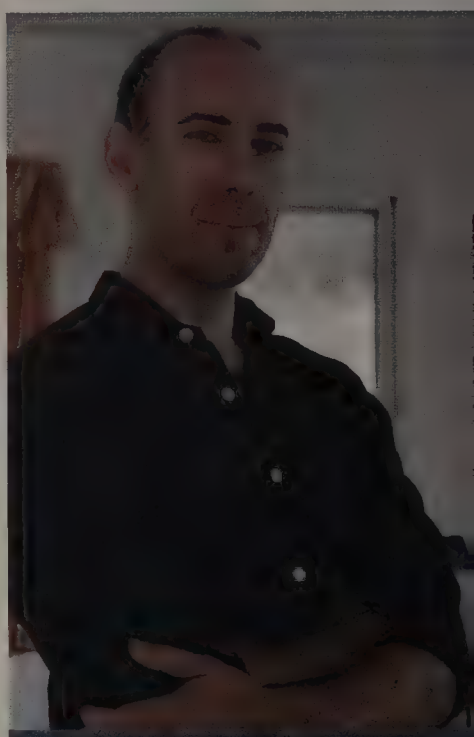
Chefs discover cutting-edge physics.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX



Adam Simha provides his calibrated knives to chefs all around Boston

Most restaurant kitchen staff aren't equipped with a physics degree from MIT. But Adam Simha, who once baked award-winning bread for Salamander in Cambridge, discovered during his undergraduate years that he had an affinity for the back of the house.

"I was working at Toscanini's in the summer, and I found I loved making the ice cream," says Simha. His circuitous route through matters culinary first led him to a garde manger position at Michaela's, and eventually to a blade-smithing class at Massachusetts College of Art, where he experienced an epiphany in high-carbon steel: "a wonderful and remarkable thing to do," he says. His first knife turned out to be a gateway knife; today, Simha designs playfully gorgeous and carefully calibrated knives for chefs at restaurants such as Radius and Rialto.

The appeal—both in looks and functionality—is in the knife's bicycle grip. "What makes it cool is that it allows for a tremendous bit of hand-fitting," says Simha. Chefs have different grips and individual preferences regarding blade shape and heft.

Now Simha, whose MKS Design company specializes in modern stainless steel furniture, is gearing up to sell knives to the rest of us, making slicing and dicing fun again. "You use a knife every day," he says. "Why not love it?"

Happy Birthday, Tremont 647!

Andy Husbands' first and best-known South End restaurant opened almost a decade ago, and the party-loving restaurateur is ready to show diners more than one wicked good time. The fun begins with a "Holiday Champagne Social" Dec. 5, continues with 10 percent off all food Dec. 10–15, and culminates in a three-course prix-fixe dinner for $30 on Dec. 16, featuring dishes from Tremont 647's first menu. But wait—there's more! The very next day, Husbands is hosting a Momo Eating Contest. Where do we file our application? Will the competition attract nationally ranked competitive eaters? And when can we watch it on Youtube? Stay tuned.

Greg Case Bakes the Cake

Is it e pluribus unum, or the other way around? One Cake, One Hundred Desserts is the title of local pastry chef Greg Case's new cookbook. Talk about resourceful—one formula, many variations. Like a si com, but much tastier. Although the may be limits to versatility—there's a lin on Amazon.com to a "cake ringtone" fo cell phones. Here's frosting in your ear.

Four Seasons and at Least Four Stories

Always be nice, wherever you go, said m grandmother, because you never kno who you'll run into again. That advice especially useful in the restaurant indu try, where fewer than six degrees of sep ration exist between chefs. Consid Brooke Vosika, who assumed the positio of executive chef at the Four Seasons Hotel at the end of September. A 24-ye veteran of the Four Seasons company, i cluding stints in Atlanta, Seattle and Ne York, Vosika worked as a line cook a sous chef in the Washington, D.C., ho alongside fellow line cook Jamie Mar mano. Today, of course, Mammano is b ter known as the chef-owner of Mistr Sorellina and Teatro. What's mo David Blessing—Vosika's predecessor the Four Seasons in Boston—is now wo ing with Mammano on an Italian resta rant project in Burlington. iB

Tastings: Vegetable Magnetism

With the absurd number of steakhouses gracing the streets of Boston, you'd be crazy to suggest that ours isn't an unapologetically meat-loving city. But for one October afternoon, the vegetable is king, at the 11th annual Boston Vegetarian Food Festival. The free event, held at the Reggie Lewis Athletic Center from 10 am to 6 pm, is every bit the herbivore haven its name suggests. Besides the broad selection of free snacks, more than 100 exhibitors, including representatives from grocery and natural foods stores, food producers, cookbook authors and dietitian consultants, are on hand to answer all your veggie queries, and there are cooking demonstrations and featured speakers. Where's the beef? It's not here, but after an afternoon at the festival, you may not care. Reggie Lewis Athletic Center, 1350 Tremont St., Boston. www.bostonveg.org/foodfest. 10 am-6 pm. Free. —RL

Performing Arts: Play by Play

Two of the most influential playwrights in the Black Arts Movement are in town to attend the world premieres of their one-act plays. For one night, the Roxbury Crossroads Theatre presents A Black Arts Drama Showcase, featuring Sonia Sanchez (2001 winner of the Robert Frost Medal in poetry) and Amiri Baraka (founder of the literary journal Yugen). Sanchez's Dirty Hearts looks at societal oppression through allegorical figures in a card game, while Baraka's existentialist drama asks Who Is You? (One-act dramas by playwrights Ed Bullins and Marvin X are also featured.) The showcases preview in Roxbury, with plans to move on to New York, Philadelphia and other major cities. Stick around after the performance for a discussion with Sanchez and Baraka about their thoughts on the production as well as their works in progress. Hibernian Hall, 184 Dudley St., Roxbury. 8 pm. $20. —LPK

CityScope: Smashing Pumpkin Records

Yes, you've long dreamed of breaking into the Guinness Book of World Records—if only you had a 700-pound identical twin to make it a snap. Well, this year's Life Is Good pumpkin festival (cosponsored by the IMPROPER) makes it almost as easy: On Oct. 21, bring your carved pumpkin along with a candle to the Boston Common, where the folks from the Life Is Good T-shirt company will once again try to break the world record for the most lit jack-o-lanterns in one place (the number to beat: a whopping 30,000). The festivities get underway at noon and, aside from the mass lighting, the party includes all sorts of entertainment—live music, treasure hunts, scarecrow stuffing, magic shows, a pumpkin-seed spitting contest and a costume parade. The celebration culminates at 8 pm with the lighting of the (hopefully) world-record-breaking 40-foot tower of pumpkins. Proceeds from Life Is Good products, food, donations, contests and raffles benefit Camp Sunshine, a retreat for children with life-threatening illnesses and their families. *Boston Common. www.lifeisgood.com. 12-8 pm. CityScope: The River Wild

You can't call yourself a Bostonian until you've been to the Head of the Charles Regatta at least once—for some locals, it's right up there with Marathon weekend. For two days, the best of the best in the world of rowing (some 7,000 of them) gather on the Charles River to show off their stuff in front of approximately 300,000 spectators. The festivities include vendors selling food and libations, and performances by national and local music acts. Anywhere along the river is prime real estate for a picnic and a view of the races, but the bulk of the happenings take place at the Reunion Village in Allston's Artesani Park. Watching the race is free; admission to the Village is $1, which benefits the Regatta's official charities. *Boston University DeWolfe Boathouse, Cambridge. www.hocr.org. Keith Urb

After a decade of providing New Englanders with a never-ending assortment of gaming and entertainment (and periodically making off with our cash), Mohegan Sun Casino is celebrating its 10th anniversary with a weekend of star-studded performances. The festivities kick off Friday night with stand-up by Lily Tomlin at 7 pm, followed by two 8 pm options: a show by country crooner Keith Urban in the Mohegan Sun Arena, and a free concert by Kevin Costner and his band (yes, that Kevin Costner) in the Wolf Den. Saturday brings more of the same, as the afternoon gets underway with a Laugh-In cast reunion at 2 pm. After a short break in the action (aka gambling time), the party continues with chances to check out stand-up by The Late-Late Show's Craig Ferguson, a preseason Celtics game against the Knicks and a free concert by the Barenaked Ladies. We just can't believe Kenny "The Gambler" Rogers wasn't available. *Mohegan Sun, 1 Mohegan Sun Blvd., Uncasville, Conn. (888-226-7711). www.mohegansun.com. A Dazzling Departed

With gripping performances in every frame, Scorsese's Southie epic really delivers.

BY SEAN BURNS

We begin as the opening, insinuating guitar tangle from the Rolling Stones' "Gimmie Shelter" slithers its way over archival footage of the South Boston busing riots. The familiar, husky voice of Jack Nicholson commandeers the soundtrack, offering a few trenchant, unprintable sentiments regarding our fair city's colorful history. And then Mick and the boys kick into their signature song full force, and Martin Scorsese's The Departed slams its foot down hard on the accelerator, refusing to let up for the next two and a half dizzying, dazzling hours.

A white-knuckle gangland suspense drama with a surrealistic edge of mania, The Departed finds a re-energized Martin Scorsese returning to the mean streets and low-lifes he instinctively understands better than any living filmmaker. This is one ferocious potboiler, hopped-up on alpha-male aggression and sickly comic blasts of stomach-churning violence. It's also the most purely entertaining popcorn flick I've seen all year.

Basically "A Tale of Two Stateys," The Departed finds Leonardo DiCaprio's squeaky, idealistic young trooper Billy Costigan fresh out of the Police Academy and quickly thrust into a top-secret, undercover assignment—infiltrating the hoodlum ranks of legendary Southie crime boss Frank Costello (a genuinely crazed Nicholson). Costigan's deep-cover status is so covert, the only officers who even know of his existence are Martin Sheen's kindly Captain Queenan and Mark Wahlberg's blisteringly foul-mouthed Sergeant Dignam.

Such secrecy is sadly necessary in the department these days, as hotshot Detective Colin Sullivan (Matt Damon) is rising rapidly through the ranks, despite making frequent, furtive cellphone calls to "his Dad," tipping the old man off about major investigations. No points for guessing that Sullivan's surrogate pop is one Frank Costello, and folks who know their local crime lore will appreciate an early flashback scene in which Frank wows the young Colin, much in the same way Whitey Bulger once won the heart of a little kid named John Connolly.

But Nicholson isn't playing Whitey Bulger. In fact, I'm not sure he's even playing anyone from the planet Earth. Dressed in slovenly, mismatched purples and prints, giving those ambidextrous eyebrows a workout and speaking almost exclusively in perverted non sequiturs, Nicholson delivers one of the weirdest, most captivating love-it-or-hate-it performances this side of Marlon Brando. His Frank Costello isn't just your everyday frightening gangster—the guy is seriously out of his gourd. Some may scoff at the baroque extent of Nicholson's theatrics, but every moment he's onscreen is charged with an almost unbearable aura of danger. You never have the slightest idea what he's going to do next.

Adapted by screenwriter William Monahan from Andy Lau and Alan Mak's 2002 Hong Kong hit, Infernal Affairs, The Departed has at its spine a terrific B-movie gimmick. DiCaprio and Damon are both traitors of a sort, and both are placed in charge of sniffing each other out—scurrying and clawing like rats in a bag. The story's simple thrust is so bold and straightforward, Scorsese can afford to noodle around the margins with all sorts of racial footnotes, comedic interludes, and complex, experimental editing techniques that crank a movie's pace into a propulsive juggernaut.

Though he turns 32 this November, there's still something perpetually boyish about DiCaprio. His face hasn't quite caught up with his age yet, which has caused more than a few credibility gaps as he's tried to segue into leading-man roles. But DiCaprio's arrested development plays beautifully into the character of Billy Costigan, who is, after all, a privileged Deerfield Academy brat playing dress-up with the L Street gangsters.

Damon is even better, summoning the back-slapping, too-loud fake confidence of every overachiever you've ever tried to avoid at bars. The brilliance of Damon's performance is how absurdly thick Colin always lays everything on, but there's another more subtle level lurking behind his eyes. What makes Damon one of our most interesting young actors is that you can always see his characters' thinking, and Colin Sullivan works every angle out in his mind before he speaks, fueled by sociopathic self-interest—assuming if he can only tell the lies loud enough then he'll eventually start believing them himself.

Monahan's script is built out of epic arias of profanity, and this hungry cast digs in like it's an all-you-can-eat buffet. Wahlberg's peerlessly funny, toilet-talking fireplug bleats so many boisterous broadsides, I'm not certain he even says a single word that doesn't begin with the letter "F." Same goes for Alec Baldwin's clueless, altogether hilarious, police chief, off-handedly offering virtuoso requests to perform anatomical impossibilities, as if expressing such sentiments came as naturally as breathing.

Scorsese's framing gets tighter and more confined as the movie ratchets up the betrayals and double-crosses, so even the visual scheme becomes a noose, slowly choking the characters to death. Monahan has added a few extra poetic wrinkles in his adaptation, turning the third act into a moral hall of mirrors from which there's no easy escape. The central image of The Departed comes back time and again in several iterations. We keep seeing that pristine gold dome atop the State House, only it's swarmed with rats. IB

All the King's Men ★
This is the kind of bloated, self-important grandst ing that makes you wish they'd cancel the Os Writer-director Steven Zallian's long-delayed rew ing of Robert Penn Warren's classic novel of poli corruption crams a talented cast into roles for w they couldn't possibly be less suited. Playing a th veiled stand-in for fabled Louisiana governor H Long, Sean Penn garbles and glowers and gene comes off more like a malevolent gnome than a ulist glad-hander. Jude Law wears a distracting am of mascara and periodically forgets his accent as P hard-drinking, disillusioned lackey. The pompous duction values and bombastic score choke any lif of Penn Warren's pulpy saga, and despite the inp executive producer James Carville, Zallian can't to locate the pressing parallels to lend his tale con porary currency. (He's also inexplicably update time frame to the '50s, which makes the absen racial politics infuriating.) Chopped to borderlin coherence during a year-long post-production pe All The King's Men relegates Kate Winslet, James dolfini, Patricia Clarkson, Anthony Hopkins Mark Ruffalo to baffling cameos. The Black Dahlia ★★
If something sounds too good to be true, it prol is. This is the case with Brian De Palma's tak James Ellroy's seminal, speculative novel about lowlifes circling around Hollywood's most note unsolved murder. Too bad De Palma is so hell-be squashing every last one of Ellroy's byzantine d and triple crosses into a tiny two-hour feature; t no time left over to drink in the toxic atmos conjured by ace cinematographer Vilmos Zsigt and brilliant production designer Dante Fer Pitched at a hysterical, half-campy tenor, The Dahlia hot-rods from one shocking revelation t other, every scene elbowing the last off the s with a retro-optical wipe. Crank ★★★
Boasting the year's most ingenious movie co that doesn't involve reptiles on an aircraft prankishly funny microbudgeted thriller star Transporter's Jason Statham as a growling hitma awakens one morning to discover that he's bee soned with an exotic Chinese cocktail. The thing that can slow the deadly potion's progre constant flow of adrenaline, and thus our hero ingest massive quantities of illegal drugs, whil running and fighting and fornicating long and enough to keep his heart pumping—at least ur can avenge his own murder. Written and direc newcomers Mark Neveldine and Brian Taylor, exhibits a raunchy, superviolent, devil-may-car berance—it feels like the work of a coup fiendishly clever kids who've had way too Mountain Dew. an Gosling the next Sean Penn? Gosling's exquisitely textured performance you somewhere unexpected with every ges- and he's matched beat-for-beat by newcomer eka Epps, playing the one student who's fig- ut her teacher's little secret. (Epps is a marvel derstatement—entire scenes hinge on the bratty way she handles a lollipop.) But this is hardly your run-of-the-mill junkie redemption saga, as director Ryan Fleck and co-writer/producer/editor, Newton native Anna Boden, aim to expose a larger generational malaise. Half Nelson is about what happens when youthful idealism goes crashing headlong into our bummer everyday life, and even if it sometimes over-reaches on a few stylistic fronts, the screenplay admirably offers no pat answers or knee-jerk uplift. Funny, sad and full of hard truths, the film's final moments are quietly, triumphantly sublime. (At Kendall Square.)

Jackass Number Two ★★★

An idiot's delight. There are few things more subjective than comedy, particularly when the humor involves young men of questionable intellectual aptitude finding new and inventive ways to bash their heads against concrete and cause grievous bodily harm to one another's bathing suit areas. Johnny Knoxville and his gang of cackling morons are back for even more death-defying flights of foolishness, episodes of alarming public nudity, and borderline-criminal misuse of both their own bodily orifices and the resultant waste products. There's no point in trying to convince certain members of the intelligentsia that this sort of business represents anything less than a death knell for Western culture, but it should nonetheless be noted that this sequel is wilder, better-paced and even more cheerfully outré than the original. (I laughed, I shrieked, I almost vomited.) Gross-out movie guru John Waters makes a brief appearance, as if giving his blessing to the onscreen doody-eating tradition he began in 1972 with Pink Flamingos, and a go-for-broke musical number borrowed from La Cage Aux Folles is designed to wreak some subversive havoc on the homophobia of the film's frat boy audience. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Last Kiss ★★

The worst date movie since The Break-Up, The Last Kiss finds Garden State's Zach Braff once again appointing himself spokesman for a generation, straining to represent the commitment-phobia of angsty early-30-somethings everywhere. As a successful young architect panicked by his girlfriend's pregnancy, Braff has a caddish minor breakdown, gallivanting around with a too-willing college student (The O.C.'s Rachel Bilson) while setting off a domino effect of relationship crises amongst friends and family. A doggedly loyal Xerox of an Italian film by Gabrielle Muccino that played here in Boston barely four years ago, both versions of The Last Kiss are (like all movies about guys at this point in their lives) essentially modern riffs on Federico Fellini's great I, Vitelloni. Unfortunately, screenwriter Paul Haggis prefers generalities to specifics. As in his inexplicably beloved Crash, every character in this adaptation takes their turn summing up the thesis of the movie in tidy, bite-size speeches. More admirable for what it's attempting to do than what it actually pulls off, The Last Kiss is just a little too orderly and subdued for its own good. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Raphael Barker and Sook-Yin Lee sex it up in John Cameron Mitchell's first-rate romantic comedy Shortbus.

Little Children ★★★½

Kate Winslet gives a performance of astonishing fearlessness and grace in this poignant adaptation of Belmont-based author Tom Perrotta's barbed novel of suburban malaise. Mapping out a moneyed neighborhood's playground rituals with an Edith Wharton–esque attention to propriety amongst proud parents, Little Children chronicles an unlikely erotic connection between Winslet's bumbling, frumpy, desperately unhappy housewife and Patrick Wilson's handsome, henpecked stay-at-home dad. Director Todd Field (who co-wrote the screenplay with Perotta himself) was mentored by the late Stanley Kubrick, and here he emulates the master's stylized, hermetically chilly, eye-of-God perspective—complete with a sardonic, third-person narration straight out of Barry Lyndon. But every time the picture begins to feel a bit too pleased with itself, these actors find a moment of truth so stark and uncomfortable, you'll be grateful for the camera's respectful distance. Former Bad News Bear Jackie Earle Haley brings both terror and pathos to the role of a sex offender paroled into a town full of raging security moms and emasculated dads, searching for a scapegoat. This overambitious movie sometimes gets a bit too big for its britches, but Winslet bravely plumbs the depths of selfishness and sadness, exposing ugly, unspoken emotions that are all too human. (Opens Oct. 20 at Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Little Miss Sunshine ★★★½

This surprisingly trenchant family comedy was the breakout smash at this past January's Sundance Film Festival, but it's actually the kind of picture the studios should be churning out on a regular basis: warm, accessible and with a lot to say about our modern way of life. The dour and dysfunctional Hoover family hits the road in a run-down VW minibus, taking a long drive from Albuquerque to L.A. so that daughter Olive (disarming Abagail Breslin) can compete in a children's beauty pageant. From Greg Kinnear's motivational speaker to Steve Carell's suicidal scholar, the Hoovers are all driving themselves trying to live up to absurd and illusory American dards of success. (The only rational one in the is Alan Arkin's foul-mouthed grandpa, and h heroin.) Little Miss Sunshine salutes the folk strive for excellence and, despite their best effort themselves sort of just muddling through as bes can. In other words, it's about all of us. (At Fe and in the suburbs.)

Man of the Year ★★

It sounds like a foolproof premise: Robin Wi stars as the host of a popular late night po comedy show (any resemblance to Jon Stew Bill Maher is entirely intentional) who's drafte grassroots movement to run as a third-party c date for President of the United States. Much surprise and delight of his gag-writing ento (which includes a lively Christopher Walke loudmouth Daily Show correspondent Lewis B the blunt, trash-talking comic improbably wi election. It's a scenario ripe for satire, but wri rector Barry Levinson has surprisingly little mind when it comes time to skewer the erodi between politics and entertainment. Man of th almost immediately devolves into a half- thriller, costarring Laura Linney as a whistle-b on the run. Nefarious computer executives b the nation's faulty electronic voting machin trying to snuff her out, and any chance for t observation takes a backseat to uninspired cha quences. Williams obviously improvised the r ity of his stump speeches, and he here hits 50/50—as usual, more impressive for his spee his accuracy. (Opens Oct. 13 at Boston Com Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Monster House ★★★

Executive produced by Steven Spielberg and R Zemeckis, this raucous, 3D computer-animate dren's yarn is a throwback to ripping 1980s A Entertainment adventures like Gremlins an Goonies. With his parents away on Halloween end, young puberty-stricken D.J. (voiced by M Musso) discovers that something's not quite righ that old, run-down house across the street. Tur it's alive—possessed by a particularly ill-tem and prone to eating anyone foolish enough to the front doorbell. The animation is simply mar-us, anthropomorphizing the very unhappy home a sinister face, complete with blinking window es for eyes and a long red carpet that serves as thing like a tongue. It's up to D.J. and his pals to ure inside and extinguish the furnace, before tless trick-or-treaters end up as lunch. I'm frankly ed as to why any studio would release this Hal-en delight in the middle of the summer, but it's boisterously entertaining kid's flick, refreshingly id of the pop culture references and bathroom that mar most children's entertainment these (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

body Allen isn't even going to try anymore, then 't see why we should have to bother, either. The theatrical feature written and directed by the lingly prolific Allen, Scoop feels like it only ex-hanks to sheer force of habit. It's a wan, wheezy , made up almost entirely of scenes from Allen's er films. Remember the good old days when dy used to rip off masters like Bergman and ni? Now he's just ripping off himself. Scarlett Jo-son stars as a dim-bulb, slatternly journalism stu-who somehow magically receives clues regard-he identity of a London serial killer from the of a hard-boiled reporter, played by Deadwood's McShane who's slumming here. Woody himself along as an annoying vaudeville magician who, most of the movie's one-liners, seems to have transplanted from the 1930s. Shot entirely in master shots, and lifting giant chunks of story tly from Alice, Broadway Danny Rose and Man-n Murder Mystery, Scoop is stunningly lazy and even by the lax standards of Allen's late career. ough already notorious on the festival circuit s no-holds-barred approach to onscreen sex es (and yes, they are indeed as graphic and un-lated as anything you'll see in any porn flick), r-director John Cameron Mitchell's warm, drous Shortbus is hardly a scummy object of tit-on for the raincoat crowd. It's instead a funny, , absolutely delightful romantic comedy set in w York City still staggering under the long ow of 9/11. Sook-Yin Lee leads a cast of brave, ly exposed newcomers, each sorting through y relationship entanglements and converging e after-hours club from which the movie takes le. Gay, straight, fat, skinny, old, young, ugly beautiful—all are welcome, and all are em-ed by the movie's boundless generosity and assion. It's no accident that the picture begins a close-up on the Statue of Liberty, as hell positions sexual freedom and exploration r inalienable rights. (There's even a rendition he Star Spangled Banner" that must be seen e believed.) More revolutionary than the dary-pushing hardcore content is Shortbus' l exuberance and empathy. The biggest organ splay here is the movie's heart. (Opens Oct. Kendall Square.)

When Nicolas Cage is off his game, there's nobody who can give a performance quite as extrava-gantly awful, and here he scores peals of unintentional laughs as a traumatized cop searching for a missing girl on an eerie island. It's telling that LaBute turned the original tale's pagan community into a bloodthirsty cult of psychotic women. There are few sights more embarrassing than that of Cage running around in a bear costume, karate-kicking Leelee Sobieski in the breasts and screaming: "Bitches! Bitches! Bitches!" Perhaps LaBute should leave filmmaking alone for a while, and take this stuff up with his therapist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

World Trade Center ★★★

Is the world ready for the feel-good 9/11 movie of the year? In sharp contrast to Paul Greengrass' har-rowing, verité-style United 93, Oliver Stone's World Trade Center is a lavishly produced, old-fashioned Hollywood melodrama. It's so mawkish and corny that I'm almost uncomfortable admitting just how much I liked it. Nicolas Cage stars as Port Author-ity cop John McLoughlin, who along with fellow of-ficer Will Jimeno (played by Crash's locksmith Michael Pena) wound up trapped beneath a moun-tain of rubble and concrete some 20 feet under the WTC's collapsed concourse. Devoid of the hyperki-netic audio-visual feeding frenzies that have marked Stone's work since the early '90s, World Trade Center is photographed as an almost stately procession of bold, simple images. It's a good movie, but a movie nonetheless—one with big stars, clichés, a rousing score and a happy ending that bends over backward to warm your heart. I don't want to sound like those people who whine that it's "too soon" for films about 9/11, but perhaps a small part of me does feel that it might be too soon for one this slick and reassuring. The Frontman Cometh

Canada's charismatic Sam Roberts sets out to score in the States.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Canadian rocker Sam Roberts has been a magnet for glowing press in recent months, but Esquire stood out. "Sam Roberts is the best live frontman in music," the magazine declared in August. "It's almost impossible to see Montreal's Sam Roberts Band live without imagining what it must have been like to witness Springsteen in his '70s glory days."

Granted, that blurb came under the heading "The Overzealous Declaration." Still, while no one is likely to see Roberts as the future of rock 'n' roll, one might think he'd be faring better than a modest turnout at T.T. the Bear's in June or an opening slot for Ben Kweller at Avalon Oct. 22.

"We've worked really hard just to get to that point, so we don't really care to turn our noses up at it, that's for sure," says the singer-guitarist, who also plans a return to T.T.'s later this fall, even though his band headlines Avalon-size halls at home. "A few years ago, living in Montreal, I never would have thought it possible that we'd be able to go and play a good show at T.T.'s and have a couple hundred people who will sing along to our songs as devoted fans in the city of Boston."

"Brother Down," from Roberts' 2003 debut We Were Born in a Flame, filtered down to Boston college radio, setting up his new album Chemical City. "In a place like New York, we haven't had any airplay whatsoever," Roberts says from a Houston hotel. "It's strictly been about touring and making our reputation on the stage. We're comfortable either way."

Media comparisons to early Bruce Springsteen haven't hurt, even if they're partly based on Roberts' scruffy beard and denim look. "You can't downplay the role of denim," says Roberts, 32. "It's a very trustworthy fabric. It's lined many a rock 'n' roll dream before. There's no silver lining. There's a denim lining, and it lasts longer."

While noting that he admires Springsteen, particularly for his live shows, Roberts cites Bob Dylan, John Lennon, Chuck Berry and Bob Marley as his leading inspirations. "They did it better than anyone else then and anyone since," he says. "They're touchstones for a lot of bands."

"Whoever said you can't be saved by a song?" Roberts sings in "Uprising Down Under," a strummed, melodic musing in an Oasis vein on the new CD, declaring, "This will live on."

"We're all striving for our own little bit of immortality, to leave something behind, and music is the way that I want to do it," he says. "It's one of the ways that we transcend the physical."

Roberts and his band push themselves on Chemical City, where an earthy, accessible tune like "Bridge to Nowhere" stands in contrast to the grand psychedelic strokes of longer tracks "The Gate" and "Mind Flood."

"Those are two fine examples of the kind of tension and mood we were going for onstage," Roberts says, crediting his bandmates: Dave Nugent on lead guitar, Eric Fares on keyboards, James Hall on bass and Josh Trager on drums. "When we were playing songs from We Were Born in a Flame, we'd take them and turn them into free-flowing jams and then come back, and I think we wanted to include that side of what we're about on record. But then again, there's always that love for the three-and-a-half-minute song."

The studio hasn't always come easily to Roberts, who likes to record preproduction basics by himself before bringing in the band. "It's not often that you find yourself in the studio when you're on the road for two years playing with five guys live off the floor, with an audience feeding off the energy that you give and giving it back," he says. "It becomes an ecosystem almost. Where in the studio, you try to re-create that, then you know it's not going to happen, so you have to concoct another reality altogether."

In reality, Roberts was classically trained on violin from age 4, before moving to guitar. "When you're 12 years old, violin doesn't necessarily express the lust for girls that rock 'n' roll can," says Roberts, who still plays violin on record, but not live. "It's nice to have your own string section built in, but it's never a public thing," he says. "It's weird, but I've never been able to play it in front of people with a hell of a lot of confidence."

Roberts also loves to play hockey, even if that's not the big league that he's cracking. "I'm more of a playmaker, but I've lit the lamp," he says. "I've got my gear, so if anyone has free ice time, feel free to drop us a line. We'll come out and skate with you with pleasure." iB

LIBRA SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Try to accept this round of accolades and applause with your customary grace. You can't help the fact that four planets, plus the sun, are packed in a part of your chart that deals with the image you're projecting and how valuable it is to your financial well-being. Since the rest of the planets are fooling around with romance, recreation and the acquaintances you're making, it could be a mistake to waste your time, now a precious commodity, on anything that isn't dependent on your personality. Obsessed with yourself perhaps? Yes. Justified? Yes.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Just in case it slipped your mind, now would be a good time to remember that lucky Jupiter will be in Scorpio only until Thanksgiving; if there are winning lottery tickets waiting to be bought, better start accumulating them ASAP. Jupiter's shift out of your sign doesn't have to be sad news; the year it'll spend in Sagittarius takes place in your house of money earned and assets acquired. However, we can never be sure if that means you'll make more bucks or if what you buy will cost more. Either way, it means a higher standard of living.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

The prognosis for the remainder of the fall season could send you straight to your shrink or spiritual advisor to prepare you for the soul-searching to come. Having Mercury in your Scorpio 12th house of seclusion and secret enemies for the next nine weeks may become a rare opportunity to investigate the past and understand how it has shaped your present. This knowledge should be especially valuable because on Thanksgiving your Jupiter ruler, the planet bestowing good fortune, will enter Sagittarius for its first visit in 12 years.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Take advantage of the activity occurring in your career mid-heaven while you can. None of the four planetary forces currently in place will remain at the top of your solar chart for long. Eventually, they'll move on to Scorpio to highlight your interaction with professional colleagues and political allies. Now is also a good time to cash in on your family's reputation or to do something that'll make the folks back home proud of their offspring. Dropping the name of a well-known client wouldn't hurt.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Being the sun sign that follows Capricorn, it makes sense to read for the Goat. Generally speaking, you could consider that forecast a preview of what's ahead for Aquarius. Sometimes it'll apply, and other times (like when I go on and on about the confusion caused by having Neptune in your sign) it won't. This week, while loving Venus favors impressionable Neptune, you're in the enviable position of becoming the object of a prominent person's affection. Look for an artist with a refined sensibility, or, just as likely, an outrageous flirt.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

As far as Pisceans are concerned, references to your Neptune ruler will keep you in the company of Aquarians, whether you like it or not. This week, while the sociable Libra sun supports Neptune, you're liable to benefit from their association as much as the Water-Bearer will. The same goes for affectionate Venus' rewarding trine to the God of the Sea, a semiannual event that the uber-romantic Fish awaits with bated breath. These are the ties that bind—if not forever, then at least until Neptune enters your own sign in 2012.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Those casual acquaintances of yours might morph into a considerable force this month, as a common interest (art, or maybe politics) put you in the same place at the same time. Enjoy the newly found camaraderie, because it may not last much past Election Day. By then your Mars ruler will be in suspicious Scorpio and you'll want to close ranks to insure that your financial profile is protected. The upside to this natural progression is the large amount of money you can earn and the significant stroke of good luck you'll enjoy in time for Christmas.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

It's time for your annual physical and psychological checkups. While your Venus ruler and the life-giving sun transit your Libra house of health and work, not only is their visit timely, it would also help you achieve a balance between two important aspects of your life. This is also the optimum time to attend to your pets' needs or to adopt a new critter. Why this action will enhance your reputation beyond my understanding, but the rewarding trine between loving Venus and self-sacrificing Neptune in your mid-heaven suggests that it could do the trick.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

In case you weren't paying attention last week, you should know that your Mercury ruler, currently in Scorpio, will remain in this mysterious sign until Dec. 7, retrograde from Oct. 28 until Nov. 17. That's the day it turns direct at nine degrees of Scorpio—the very same degree it hit last Oct. What you're thinking about and who you're discussing it with this weekend may continue to be important. For example, the surprise that's sprung on you won't seem as shocking when it's repeated the day after the election.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

If the Crab managed to keep its cool (and its job) during the Aries full moon last weekend, you probably won't experience any heavy-duty emotional fluctuations (as you did during the eclipses of September) until next year. So assume that it'll be smooth sailing for a while. Why not settle into an appealing domestic life while the arty Libra energy both challenges and satisfies your aesthetic sensibility? Come solar Scorpio, a compatible water sign, most of those challenges (what color to paint? which chef's knife?) will be gone.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

This is an excellent week to commit to a high-minded artistic goal you share with a partner. Whether you're writing a song or composing a sermon, the vision projected by imaginative Neptune in your marriage house finally supports, rather than downplays, your own creative abilities. If you're able to publicize this joint effort or get on the Internet, so much the better. There won't be this many planets jostling for position in your Libra house of communication for another couple of years. The closer you get to solar Scorpio, the more apparent your talent.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Read for Gemini. It's important that you know about your Mercury ruler's impending shift into retrograde, and the impact on what happens during the rest of the autumn season began last weekend. Maintaining the correct perspective is one of the Virgin's more valuable assets–a gift not every sign can claim. So do what you can to stay on top of how things are developing, and try to recognize the pattern as it appears. Now would be a good time to buy the tools you're going to need. And get the car tuned up.

Baby Come Back

B: I know we broke up two years ago, but I hate your new girlfriend. She's absolutely gorgeous, and I can't stand it. You don't deserve her, but you do deserve me! Please break up with her soon so I can stop stalking her on her MySpace page. I'm always yours.

—Stalkin' Sally

Where You Bin?

To the jerks who keep stealing our recycling bin: Thank you for once again taking our blue recycling bin and making it once again impossible for us to recycle. Everyone wants to save the environment and apparently you want to do it more than others. As avid environmentalists, we should inform you that the bins don't come with the apartment, and yes you did steal someone's bin! They're not on the sidewalk with our address on it for nothing. If we had written, "Please take our blue bin as we no longer feel like recycling," then yes, you're at your leisure to grab it. But we didn't, so please stop stealing our bin.

—The Girls Who Can No Longer Recycle

Watch It

To the person who complained about those who wear sunglasses at the gym: My sister just got diagnosed with eye cancer (melanoma). They had to remove her eye. I know I'm going to wear my sunglasses to protect myself every chance I get.

—Miss AM

Mall Brawl

To the guy at the Natick Mall with his teen daughter and wife: Thanks so much for being such a jerk, in front of our family no less! I'm sure your daughter learned a lot from you about how to respect a woman from our little run-in. Me, a semi-new mom with my eight-month-old in a carriage, walking past Crate & Barrel. You and your family came out of the store. Your daughter cut me off, and I almost tripped over my carriage with my daughter in it. I knew she didn't mean to cut me off, and she apologized and let me go ahead with my daughter. I didn't say anything, but smiled, and moved on.

Did you have to say, "Excuse me, how rude" to me? No. Your daughter and I were fine. And when I turned to you and explained the situation calmly and said I wasn't being rude, did you then need to say, "Whatever, you fat dad." This was from a guy who is bald, short and old enough to be a little nicer. Let me tell you, mister, karma comes around and you'll get yours. I can always change being overweight, but you'll never change the space inside you that has to make yourself feel better by putting others down, to compensate for your many shortcomings. I'm sure your wife understands what I mean. Interesting how during our so-called discussion, your wife and daughter took off on you, huh? Next time, try thinking about how you'd feel if some random guy in the mall said the same thing to your daughter. Lastly, my husband adores me, heavy or not, and he'll be looking for you next time we're at the mall. He has some things he'd like to say as well.

—TAG's Mom

Love Amid the Khakis

I'm writing this from NYC with a broken yet hopeful heart. We worked together at the Gap at Porter Exchange in the summer of '94. Me (Dan): I was 18-years old. I had short brown hair, slim, about 6'1" (now 6'4"and still slim with blondish/reddish hair). You: I seem to remember your name was Meg. You were about the same age, with shoulder-length, straight, blond hair, almost always with a Mountain Dew in tow for the early-morning stock shift. You're the most beautiful and attractive woman I've ever known—a true knockout. I left the job too shy to act upon the suspicion you had the same feelings for me as I had for you. I've thought about you over the years, wondering where you are and what has become of you. On Sept. 16, I spoke with my mom, in advance of my trip to Boston the following weekend to celebrate my birthday. She went to the same Gap and spoke with a lady who matched your description and said she missed me when I left and that I never said goodbye. I was so excited, determined to seize the chance I missed so many years ago. I went to the store and the person I thought was you, wasn't. I don't know if you're still around, or even if there was anything to what I sensed during that summer 12 years ago, but if you're still in the area, and you're not involved with anyone else, I'd love nothing more than to hear from you, or from someone who knows how to contact you.

—danjbraun@yahoo.com

Casual Corner

I want to express my gratitude to those dozen or so people who continually post messages in the "casual encounters" section on Craigslist. You've provided my roommate and me with a medium that ensures us mindless entertainment, as well as the satisfaction of knowing that we're a little less desperate than a small percentage of the Boston population. To the guy who always poses with the Poland Spring water bottle: You're infamous in our circle of friends. Well done.

—Bored but Amused

Madness and the Mass. Masses

Every time I walk towards Newbury Street or Back Bay station I come into contact with the unlikeliest of people. It's like everyone with a twitch or bad habit congregates near Back Bay and all of the adjacent streets. Whether the person is gross and shabby, tall and crazy, short and scary or just plain strange, I can never seem to get away from weirdos in this crowded city. To all out there, stop grossing us hard workers out as we make our way to work everyday.

—Utterly Disgusted

Too Cute for the Commute

To the girl on the Green Line train: I see you most mornings, and even in the morning you always look amazing! We chatted a few times and exchanged names but nothing more. I guess I never had the guts to ask you if you were single (it's been a long time for me and I'm the shy type). Needless to say, you're very cute, especially with your glasses. Anyway, if you're not too busy and if you're not taken, let's have coffee.

—Kevyn, your friendly "T" rider

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

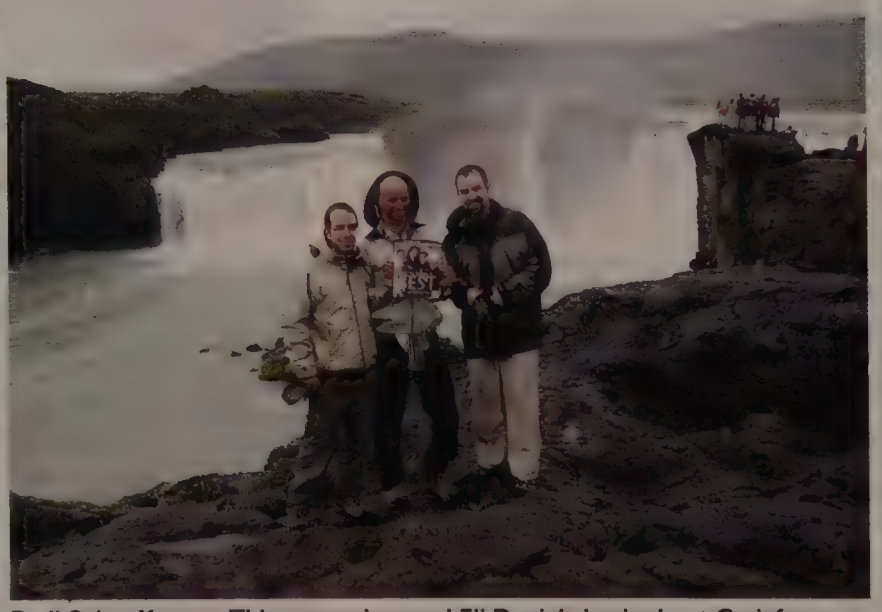
Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Estelle Lux was all smiles at Monet's Garden in Giverney, France, which contradicts the old French proverb: Mo' Monet, Mo' Problems.

Annamaria and Gina Addonizio traveled to Sorrento, Italy. In the background sits a castle once owned by the Bourbon family, as well as a jetty where homeless Italians probably drink lots of Bourbon.

Amrish Pattni and Sarah Barrett had a blast at the Sapporo Bier Garten in Sapporo, Japan, although lifting their steins with chopsticks proved consistently difficult.

Janna and Anthony Robson traveled to Queensland, Australia, to pick up their new adopted son. "Koala, it's Australian for baby!"



Rudi Seitz, Kannan Thiruvengadam and Eli Daniel checked out Godafoss, a waterfall in northern Iceland. Godafoss translates to God's Falls, except in Germany where it means David Hasselhoff's Falls.

Canadian consul general Neil J. Le Blanc loves fall fashion like he does the sweet sounds of Bryan Adams.

Dinner nightly. USDA Prime steaks, dry aged and butchered on premises are featured at this quintessential steakhouse where Chef Tindaro Losurdo creates outstanding fare. The menu offers variety beyond steak with spectacular seafood bouquets, lobsters, outstanding sides, as well as homemade desserts. Set in a treasured landmark known to Bostonians as "the Castle;" the meticulously restored space has seven working fireplaces and dining rooms that span four floors to blend fun and formality.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP:130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331; SUNSET CANTINA: 916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646. Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 am.

THE BLACK ROSE 160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnection.com. Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

THE LIVING ROOM 101 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, MA. 617-723-5101. www.thelivingroomboston.com. Cool, comfortable, casual– the name says it all. Where else can you enjoy American comfort food while relaxing on a couch or at a table, and even have dessert first? This restaurant, bar & lounge succeeds at being homey rather than haughty. There's an inventive martini list and friendly staff, just moments from Quincy Market and the North End. Try the Living Room's awesome apps like Chicken Quitos, Mini-Burgers or Shrimp & Avocado Egg Rolls. Full dinner menu is served from 4:30 PM until Midnight daily. Saturday and Sunday a "Pajama Brunch" is served from 11:00 AM to 3:00 PM. Bar & Lounge open until 1:00 AM daily.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK 1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060. www.irishconnection.com. Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

VENEZIA RESTAURANT 20 Ericsson St., Boston 617-436-3120. For authentic Italian fare, impeccable service and an atmosphere unmatched on Boston's Waterfront, Venezia provides one of the city's most unique and pleasurable dining experiences. Your destination for everything from a relaxing midday lunch to a romantic dinner for two, Venezia can also accommodate private affairs like wedding receptions and business functions, and features live music on Friday and Saturday nights.

SUNSCREEN, SHMUNSCREEN...

If the fall social swirl had an official start, it had to be the opening night of the Huntington Theater's season, which drew all the Who's from Who's Who–ville out for cocktails and a buffet dinner in the costume and scene shops, followed by an incredible performance of Radio Golf, the last play August Wilson wrote before he died.

Besides such theatrical types as Wilson's widow, Constanza Romero, artistic director Nicky Martin and sitcom star Phylicia Rashad, the everyone-who's-anyone crowd included the likes of Dr. Deborah Prothrow Stith and her husband, former ambassador to Tanzania Charles, the lovely Dola Hamilton Stemberg squired by legal eagle George Deptula, Harvard chaplain Peter Gomes and retired factotum Henry Rosovsky, broadcasting behemoth Oedipus, Chestnut Hill art collector Arthur Goldberg, philanthropic party pair Lee and Cokie Perry, Channel 5 glamazon Karen Holmes Ward and the ever affable Chip, dowager empress Smoki Bacon and her royal consort, Dick Concannon, test prep heiress Susan Kaplan and her delightful daughter, Gila Belsky, devilishly handsome dance legend Jose Mateo, Boston Ballet head honcha Valerie Wilder, powerbroker Ralph Martin, real estate magnate Douglas Krupp and the dazzling Judi, restaurateur and man-about-town Darryl Settles and his stunning other half, Lisa Owens, and one woman who complained about the sudden onset of cool weather by saying indignantly, "I had to put stockings on, for god's sake!"

Judging by the thunderous standing ovation, the play blew everyone away. Meanwhile, the evening's witty exchanges included the following:

Someone said to Nicholas Martin, "You look awfully tan and rested for someone who's in rehearsal for a Broadway play," to which he responded, "I'm Jewish. Three minutes in the sun, and I look like I've been wandering in the desert for 40 years."

AT LEAST THE DAYS OF HEROIN CHIC ARE OVER...

Socialites and celebrities have been sporting the clothes of fashion designer Denise Hajjar for decades, so it was a superglam, glittery affair when she celebrated the opening of her new boutique at the Copley Plaza with a fashion show to benefit the Friends of Brigham and Women's Hospital.

Seen milling about in the cocktail reception or perched delicately on gilded chairs in the grand ballroom for the runway show were such fashion plates and fabulistas as legendary threads peddler Yolanda Cellucci, raven-haired beauty Robin Jones, broadcasting babe Paula Lyons, peripatetic do-gooder Jacqui Budd, the hotel's grande dame, Peggy Dray, Dress for Success founder Enith Levine, publishing duo David Jacobs and Gen Tracy, Back Bay glamazon Jeryl Oristaglio, modeling den mother Jo Somers, Brookline arts patron Bunni Roberts, fashion photographer Tracy Aiguier, mohawked fashionista Charles Cross of Alfred Fiandaca, South End trendsetter Molly Dunne, the ever-lovely Daria McLean, and the impossibly gorgeous triumvirate of Dr. Deanna Lites, Linda Ergas and Frances Rivera of Channel 7.

Aside from a slight wardrobe malfunction, which resulted in one of the model's breasts bouncing in full view down the runway, the evening went perfectly smoothly, and as with any fashion show, it brought out the cattiness in everyone, including the guest who regarded one of the models and said, "She looks like she's on Thorazine and they need to lower the dosage."

A DAY WITHOUT SUNSHINE?

It was Fashion Week meets the Westminster Kennel Club when Neiman-Marcus hosted the Boston Bark Bash, a runway show and cocktail reception where guests were encouraged to bring their dogs, to raise money for the Massachusetts Melanoma Foundation.

Prominent among the throng were party chair Diane Maloney, marketing maven Lindsay Curtis and her bichon frise, Breezy, photo supplies magnate David Gordenstein and his pug, Pugsley, the delightful duo of Sara and Carolyn Donahue (accompanied by their adorable lap dogs), Barbara Brown and her little white fur-ball, Mini Me, the delightful Dale Roberts and he miniature poodle, Red, the store's stunnin blonde GM Lesley Greer, drop-dead-gor geous models Bethany van Delft, Tachou Michael Philip and Linda Cole, with he husband, Sebuh Petrosian, and their bi black hound, Rosie, and fashion plat Frankie Boyer, who left her chow, Toto, a home, saying, "She's such a little bitch, I de cided not to bring her."

While guests nibbled delicious finger foo served from dog dishes, the models presente the hottest looks for fall, but the biggest fash ion statement came from a pair of littl pooches wearing sweaters embroidered wit "Don't Piss Me Off" and "Bitches Love Me."

During the show, one man whispered "I'm just waiting for one of them to go to th bathroom on the floor," to which his frien replied, "Who—the dogs or the models?"

Sure enough, during the canine parad that followed the fashion show, a puddle urine appeared as predicted, and a stor employee, rushing by with a towel to clea it up, was overheard muttering, "What's day at Neiman-Marcus without someon peeing on the floor?" IB

FROM THE EDITOR

LOCAL SOUNDS

When photographer Larissa Underwood showed up to shoot the Tufts-born band Guster for our cover, its four members (knowing the issue would be out on Halloween) greeted her in costumes worthy of Pee-wee's Playhouse. That was a surprise to us, but if you know Guster's history in Boston, it fits. The band once opened a show at the Bank of America Pavilion riding Segways and wearing helmets, and though Guster now tours nationally, singer-guitarist Ryan Miller says those kinds of antics are special treatment for the town that launched them. "It's just Boston mostly," Miller tells our music editor Paul Robicheau. "Boston has certain expectations."

In this issue Robicheau also delivers his annual top10 band picks—is the next national act among them? Check them out on Boston stages.

NEW DEAL

Thank you for your Newcomers edition (Oct. 11). It's the issue I wish I'd had when I moved here a year ago. Still, with the perspective I've gained since then, I was able to smile knowingly at Ezra's article ("Annoying Boston"), gain tips from Ethan's story ("How to Win Friends and Influence People, Beantown Edition"), and failing that, follow Carmen's advice ("I Want to Eat Alone"). It was a well-done issue, as always.

—JENNIFER KUSHNIER
Jamaica Plain

I've been in the Boston area for about two years now, from San Francisco—the original Bay Area—and after reading Ezra's piece ("Annoying Boston," Oct. 11), the anger subsided. The annoying facts definitely rang true and made me laugh, as I wondered how I was going to help my boyfriend (also from Cali) get over his anger. Excellent job at articulating what newcomers feel like when we get to Bahston!

—JENNY JOSEPH
Randolph

BOUNTIFUL HARVEST

Looking back at local restaurant history ("Look Back in Hunger," Sept. 27), you need to go to the source of the Nile: the original Harvest, created by Ben and Jane Thompson. Harvest chefs I can recall include Lydia Shire, Sara Moulto Joe Hyde, Frank McClelland, and the team of Bob Kinkead, Jimmy Burke and Chris Schlesinger—and I'm sure I'm leaving out other restaurant stars who passed through the swinging doors. Actually, you should consider an article on the history of Harvest, from chefs to customers; it was the place to be from 1976 to 1986.

—TED RABIDOUX

THE WORD

EDITED BY OLYON HETERMAN

NEW IN TOWN

Rock of Ages

You dig live music. Really you do. Why, back in the day, you used groove out to garage beats at Toad and T.T.'s, slinging back PBR talls till last call. You were way rock 'n' roll, dude. Where've you been?

The folks behind Revolution Rock Club—the new music venue and eatery in the Financial District—have figured out that there are plenty of live-rock fans who've gotten caught up in a world of (gasp!) careers and responsibilities. Who've realized it's hard to hold out until 11:15 to catch the headliner in Cambridge and still hit the opening bell. To lure the faithful back into the fold, Revolution's owners have come up with a fairly compelling formula: Position the venue right outside the major downtown office buildings (High Street), stock top-shelf booze ($12 martinis), start the shows right after work (5 pm, Wednesday through Friday) and wrap up on the early side (11 pm). "This is a classy, comfortable spot to have a couple of drinks with your coworkers and listen to some good live music," says co-owner Shawn Donovan. While the acts skew largely classic rock and pop, DJs spin a wider mix the rest of the week, from soft rock during the day to a younger, clubbier vibe on weekend nights, including rock/hip-hop mashups.

The dinner menu trots out the predictable fried calamari ($9), cheeseburger and fries ($9) and steak tips ($17), but chef Adrian Fuentes goes beyond the usual bar-food paradigm with entrées like rosemary-roasted chicken with "black truffle loaded mac & cheese" ($16), short ribs with garlic mashed potatoes ($20) and seared salmon with warm fruit salsa ($18).

The one glitch in Revolution's otherwise-solid game plan may be the kitsch factor, which could frighten away fans before they've settled into their first Ketel and tonic. (Did a Hard Rock Café explode in here?) But get past the gleaming chopper in the window, the faux-graffiti rock lyrics over the bar and the cocktails with "rockin'" names like Purple Haze (raspberry vodka, chambord, cranberry juice and champagne; $10) and the "Satisfaction" Margarita ($12), and the vibe seems, oddly, legit. On a recent Friday, the place was already hopping at 4:30 pm—not with sweatshirt-clad tourists clutching bags of branded loot, but with 30-somethings doing convincing turns as bona fide rock fanatics (albeit buttoned down in Casual Friday getups). The big question: If the music is hip and the drinks are expertly executed, how much does the packaging really matter? Stay tuned. 200 High St., Boston (617-261-4200). —JH

A Leg Up

Some of the biggest news to come out of the Celtic camp during the off-season was the team's plan to catapult itself into the 21st century by becoming the last club in the NBA to field a dance squad. In anticipation o opening night at the Garden (Nov. 1, 7:30 pm), w caught up with Celtics Dancers director Marina Orteg to find out what's in store.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Can you sum up the Celtics Dancers for us in one word?

Marina Ortega: Exciting. It's the first team the Celtic have ever had, and so many of the girls have dropped everything to come to Boston to be part of this team.

IB: What do you say to the old-school fans who think the Celtics don't need dancers?

MO: Well, I understand where they're coming from But times have changed. They should just sit back an watch the show—I think they'll see that the girls add lot to the Celtics experience.

IB: Any immediate plans to "Bring Sexy Back"?

MO: [Laughs.] I think we'll maybe bring sexy back o Friday nights, but for the most part we're going to kee it classy and dignified.

IB: Is this squad all about dancing, or is there a cheerleading aspect as well? Can we expect you to "bring it on"?

MO: There's no cheerleading at all. I mean, we're goin to help the crowd get involved at crucial times, but w won't be yelling "Go! Fight! Win!" or anything.

IB: We think "Celtics Dancers" sounds a bit rigid. What about the "Greeny Boppers"?

MO: Oh my god, definitely not! We're going to stic with the Celtics Dancers, because we really wanted t find something that would help people take us seriousl IB: Any surprises for opening night?

MO: I'm just gonna say that you have to be there, b cause we're definitely coming out with a big bang.

IB: Lastly, will the Celtics make the playoffs this year, and if so, how much will it be a result of the Celtics Dancers?

MO: Absolutely, and probably about 95 percent.

IB: Don't you think you're underestimating yourself a little?

MO: OK... it's more like 98 percent.

TASTY TIDBITS

Major Chang-es

China in a Bull Shop... You know those ubiquitous Chinese takeout joints packed into a space the size of a broom closet? Well, this is the exact opposite. Next spring, P.F. Chang's, the national restaurant chain, will open its second Boston spot in the whopping 10,000-square-foot Pru Center space once occupied by Marché, the glorified gourmet food court. Spread over two floors, the new digs will feature space for al fresco dining and tables galore.

Table Talk... Foodies seeking a little extra TLC should head to the Four Seasons for Aujourd'hui's latest culinary addition: Table 76. Seated there, you'll shell out $250 for a four-course tasting (with wines, dessert and coffee), but with that premium comes face time with chef William Kovel and sommelier Brick Loomis, who'll chat up you and fellow 76ers about what you're eating and drinking. It's almost like being invited over to their place for dinner. Aujourd'hui at Four Seasons, 200 Boylston St., Boston (617-351-2037). www.fourseasons.com/boston/dining.html.

Reopen, Sesame... In July 2005, Nobel Garcia shut down his El Oriental de Cuba—a staple on the J.P. dining scene for more than a decade—after an arsonist's fire bomb left the restaurant in ruins. Finally, a little more than a year (and a hell of a lot of work) later, Garcia has reopened the spot. And while the restaurant serves the same menu—a vast and affordable selection of authentic Cuban grub—the décor has been remodeled with planters outside, snazzy new signage and a cathedral-style ceiling to replace the flat original. 41 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-524-6464).

P.F. Chang's

El Oriental de Cuba

Todd English

Around the World in 30 Minutes... This winter, celebrity chef Todd English adds another notch to his culinary belt as host of his own PBS show, Food Trip. The premise: English travels the globe in hot pursuit of regional treats—French food in Montreal, Southwestern fare in Phoenix, Kobe beef in Tokyo—and at the end of each show, he heads back to Charlestown to create the dish of the day in the kitchen of his flagship restaurant, Olives. The half-hour show premieres in January, and rumor has it that an early episode features a kitchen visit by Mayor Tom Menino.

On a Roll?... Well, it sure took long enough, but the city finally has a place to get healthful burgers served by roller-skating employees. B.good, the local burger chain, is slated to open its third location this winter, in a closed-down Coolidge Corner gas station. The new spot will feature the same spate of "healthful" hand-packed burgers as its siblings, as well as an open-air dining area (thanks to the former gas station's retractable garage door) and a large parking lot where servers on skates will deliver burgers right to your car. —RL

FASH FLASH

Something's Afoot

You can never be too rich, too thin or too well-heeled—at least two of which seem always at odds. Sure, you could trade in your Jimmy Choos for Payless pumps to stave off financial ruin, but less drastic measures call for teetering over to the Pru, where Charles David will open its first New England boutique in November. The space, adjacent to Club Monaco and Ann Taylor, will boast a brand-new design concept from the in-house architectural team—rich woods, bronze and glass shelving, floor-to-ceiling mirrors, Venetian plaster walls, limestone floors and oversized couches. And the shoes? Up-to-the-minute delicious—and affordable. A bevy of peep-toe pumps include an edgy suede-stacked wedge with leather trim ($125) and a pony fur, leopard-print style that'll make you giddy ($145). Dare to don a pointy-toe, snakeskin-leather spike-heel bootie ($345), or tall lace-up boots in patent leather and plaid ($160). For evening we're eyeing the bronze, metallic-leather platform slide with knotted bow ($115), and for day, there's a perfect leather ballet flat in metallic or patent leather ($125). Just don't forget to check out Charles David's sweet collection of handbags: You'll need somepla to stash all that extra cash. www.charlesdavid.com. —Marni Elyse Katz ction has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Party Arty... After numerous false starts due to construction delays, the Institute of Contemporary Art says that it's really, truly ready to open the doors to its shimmering new glass-walled digs. This time around, the official opening is slated for Dec. 10, and given that the ICA staff has now moved in, the collections are almost installed and the 325-seat theater is finally finished, we've got half a mind to take their word for it. On opening day, admission is free, and the 12-hour celebration offers a slew of events—including the debut of the group exhibition Super Vision. 100 Northern Ave., Boston (617-478-3110). www.icaboston.org.

Antique Chic... Everything old is new again—or at least it's made to look that way. Making its U.S. debut on Newbury Street, the French home-goods company Comptoir de Famille has arrived on the scene with a trove of designs inspired by antiques you might find at a flea market in the French countryside. The name translates to "family trading post," and the store emulates a sophisticated general store throughout the collection, which includes furniture, textiles, ceramic dinnerware, glassware, scented soaps, vintage plaques and more. Faux-old never looked so good. 129 Newbury St., Boston (617-266-7970).

Hooked on Classics... Two local family-run jewelry houses will become one once David & Co. takes over the storied Shreve, Crump & Low this February. A ceremonial changing of hands? Not quite. David & Co owner David Walker says he plans to bring back the traditional designs expunged from the inventory during a recent image overhaul that proved too avant-garde for SCL's clients. "You couldn't even buy a diamond tennis bracelet there over the past few years!" Walker told the IMPROPER. The ultra-contemporary pieces have mostly been liquidated, he adds, and the classic pieces on which the Shreve name was built are back for good.

Riding High... Owning a Lamborghini Gallardo, a Viper SRT-10 or a Lotus Esprit Coupe may not fit your budget anytime soon. But that doesn't mean you can't tool around town with the trust-fund kids who can actually afford it. Premier Car Club, based in Salem, N.H., will deliver the car of your dreams right to your door for a yearly fee. Think of it as an auto timeshare. Pick the days you want in advance, and the car is yours minus the hassles of maintenance and storage. Yearly fee: $10,000–$28,000. Upping your cool factor 10-fold: priceless. www.premiercarclub.com. —Leslie P. Kilgore

HOUSE OF CAMPAIGN

Let's take a moment to get informed on this November's major issues.

It seems like voter apathy has reached new heights. Where's Diddy telling me to Vote or Die? Couldn't some other rapper pick up that torch during non-presidential years? I nominate Chamillionaire and Krayzie Bone—voting would be much more popular with the 18-to-25 demographic if it were somehow portrayed as dangerous and illegal: "Referendums, I bend 'em, fillin' pallets with fake ballots 'cause I'm votin' dirty…." Not that I need the motivation. I love voting so much that this year for Halloween I'm going as Recount Dracula.

Like most people, I get my election information from TV commercials. Luckily, I watch plenty of TV, so I'm quite informed about this year's candidates and issues. Since I'm a nice guy, I'll pass that information along to you, without prejudice or agenda, so that you can make your own intelligent decision Nov. 7.

I've learned quite a bit from the gubernatorial commercials. For instance, the Christy Mihos TV spots demonstrate that Christy Mihos is, first and foremost, a dude. I'll bet a guy named Christy doesn't take any crap. Think about the Johnny Cash song "A Boy Named Sue." When Sue eventually finds his dad and tries to kill him, ol' Pops says, "Ya ought to thank me, before I die, for the gravel in ya guts and the spit in ya eye, cause I'm the son-of-a-bitch that named you Sue." I'll bet a boy named Christy has some gravel in his guts as well, if that's what you're looking for on Beacon Hill.

Kerry Healy's ads don't really say much about Kerry Healy, but they've taught me a few things about Deval Patrick. Apparently, he loves criminals. Healy's ads make me worry that if Deval Patrick became governor, he'd just open all the prison doors and let the criminals out, then he'd put the honest people in jail, because that's how soft he is on crime. Healy's ads don't say that Patrick himself is a criminal, but the message is implicit: It takes one to know one. Further, Patrick got a cop-killer's death sentence reduced, so now instead of sitting on death row for years using taxpayer money for appeals, he's practically living at a Sandals resort—if Sandals featured daily butt-rape.

Patrick's commercials point out that Healy, as lieutenant governor, has been involved in every bad thing that's happened to the state in the past four years, from unemployment to the Big Dig collapse. But, you know, you didn't hear it from him, because he's not running a negative campaign.

There's also a fourth candidate, but I think she's a hippie who doesn't have enough money for TV commercials, s really don't know anything about her. Bu you live in a geodesic dome in North Ada and have a compost pile, you probably already know who you're voting for anyway.

Besides the race for governor, the oth hot-button topic is Question No. 1, whi asks if grocery stores should be allowed sell wine. Both sides offer compelling co mercials. The "Vote Yes" camp serves u former state liquor official calmly stati that the only people who wouldn't wa wine available in grocery stores are liqu store owners, and breaking their wine-op will not result in widespread mayhem a destruction. The "Vote No" ads show tee agers loitering outside convenience sto while their friends go inside to buy wi from idiotic cashiers, who clearly aren't smart about spotting fake IDs as their cu ning liquor-store counterparts.

To try to ascertain who's telling t truth, I went down to the 7-Eleven by t

> I'LL BET A GUY NAMED CHRISTY DOESN'T TAKE ANY CRAP. THINK ABOUT THE JOHNNY CASH SONG "A BOY NAMED SUE."

Aquarium, aka "the 7-Eleven that s booze." Sure enough, there were a bunch bums right outside the door, panhandl and drinking Night Train. Then I went the 7-Eleven in the Theatre District, wh doesn't sell alcohol. There were a bunch bums right outside the door, panhandl and drinking Night Train. So maybe need to consider another potential side fect of widespread vino access: the possi ity that we'll cultivate a new generation wine snobs. Imagine if all our teenag start talking like Paul Giamatti in Sideways: "This is quaffable, but far from transc dent…. Is that my Justin Timberlake t tone or yours?" That would be insufferab

The only other question is how made it this far without an immature us the word "caucus." So on Nov. 7, rem ber that if your election lasts longer t three hours, you might damage your cat and need a new poll. iB

FRESH BLOOD

The Pats' new recruits are stepping up to ease the pain of losing big name stars.

The Denver game had some pundits fooled, but not me. I'm done with the nonsense that the Pats have lost too many key players, that there's a limit to how far you can ride a bunch of guys who'll never play a game in Hawaii. This team is headed to the playoffs again. And when they get there, you can bet the farm they'll be playing their best football of the year.

First of all, we should've known something was up on draft day. Bill Belichik isn't going to use a first-round draft pick on a running back unless the guy is truly a sleeper, but even the great coach himself couldn't have known what he was getting in Laurence Maroney.

It's early yet in Maroney's pro tenure, but when you hear Tom Brady throw out the old Parcells line, "Let's not put him into Canton just yet," it should bring a smile to every single person in Patriots Nation. He's that good.

Maroney is obviously electric on the field, but there's also a certain presence about him off the field, especially in the locker room. People are drawn to him. You could certainly see him emerging as one of the leaders on the team in a couple of years.

But for right now, this guy is making his bones on the gridiron. He has the ability to beat you up inside the tackles if need be, but the bounce and acceleration to beat the defense around the end make Mr. Maroney the kind of gamebreaker we haven't seen around these parts since the heyday of Curtis Martin.

Martin himself is headed to the Hall of Fame when he's through playing. Is Maroney the type of back that could meet him there someday? Well, if Brady's excited then I'm excited, because there's no better judge in the Patriots locker room than Tom Terrific.

Question: At what point do you take the bulk of Corey Dillon's carries and literally hand them off to Maroney? Dillon himself is also likely headed to the Hall, and while his retirement isn't imminent, he's done as an every-down back. Let's face it—Dillon is becoming the new Jerome Bettis.

The last couple years, Bettis played the role of battering ram, getting most of his carries when the team was inside the 10 yard line. When the Steelers were on the goal line or needed short yards for a first down, in came the Bus. For a great warrior like Dillon to evolve into this role is perfect. Hopefully, a few years down the line, Dillon can leave the field in the way the Bus did—as a champion. With Dillon battering defenses and Maroney a constant threat break the long runs, the Pats' platoon i well-rounded run threat.

This doesn't mean the Patriots don't ha some warts on offense. For starters, th don't have a receiving corps up to the sta dard we expect from Super Bowl champio One addition that could pay dividends Doug Gabriel, whom the Patriots stole fr Oakland for a measly fifth-round draft pick caught up with Gabriel recently down Foxboro, and the first thing I noticed is t guy is thick, with big hands. He's the kind guy you wouldn't expect at wide receiver.

The funny thing is, Gabriel still gets ca from rabid Raider fans who can't understa why he's no longer in Oakland. The answ is simple: Gabriel, a fourth-year receiv never got the opportunity to blossom behi guys like Randy Moss and Jerry Porter.

With all due respect to Troy Brow Gabriel doesn't have that excuse anymo

MARONEY AND GABRIEL, WITH THEIR LOOK-ALIKE HAIRDOS, ARE THE COACH'S NEW CHOSEN ONES.

This place reeks of opportunity at the rece ing position. Since Deion Branch was trad to the Seahawks—a trade I still question terms of timing—Gabriel has quie emerged as the No. 1 receiver. I didn't kn much about Gabriel before, other than h ing him on the bench of my fantasy footb team. But this is a Patriots kind of guy. doesn't talk much. He works his butt And Brady loves him. Enough said.

You can't help but recognize the nu ber of players like Gabriel that roam locker room every day. They just do care about their personal stats. It reall about the team.

Maroney and Gabriel, with their lo alike hairdos, are the coach's new cho ones. Will one of them someday ow Super Bowl MVP trophy, like the depar Branch? As I've said many times bef When in doubt, bet on Belichick. IB

Soroff ON

MARIA LOPEZ

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Newly minted TV personality and former Superior Court judge Maria Lopez was born in Havana and was 8 years old when her family escaped Castro's revolution to start over in Miami. She quickly learned English and went on to attend Smith College and B.U.'s School of Law. In 1993, after five years of service as a District Court judge in Boston, she became the first Latina appointed to the Massachusetts Superior Court. She presided over one of the most contentious civil cases in Massachusetts history, involving the Demoulas family's dispute over a billion-dollar supermarket fortune, and she was widely ridiculed for her unpopular sentencing of Ebony Horton, a transgendered defendant convicted of attempted sexual assault. Because of the way Lopez spoke to a prosecutor in the case, she was accused of judicial misconduct and ordered to apologize; she chose instead to resign. A visiting scholar at Brandeis University, the mother of two lives with her husband, Phoenix Media Group founder Stephen Mindich, in Newton, and last month she launched her nationally syndicated courtroom TV series, Judge Maria Lopez.

Jonathan Soroff: Are you always conscious of being a Latina female?
Maria Lopez: Of course. How could I not be with a name like Maria Lopez?
JS: So what does that mean to you?
ML: It means I'm strong, outspoken and sexy.
JS: What do you think will happen in Cuba once Castro kicks the bucket (if he hasn't already)?
ML: I don't think there's going to be any major changes. I think they have a strong army that will stabilize the regime for a while.
JS: Would you like to see it become a democracy?
ML: Well, I have a bit of an issue with democracy being imposed on different cultures. I'd like to see the Cuban people decide for themselves what kind of system they want. That's not a linear process. I mean, it's a country that hasn't had a chance to learn about being independent.
JS: Your take on the current immigration flap?
ML: I'm fairly concerned with protecting our borders, but that's a long way from creating laws that make undocumented workers felons. They've been here for years. I'm really quite sympathetic to them, and I think this country would come to a stand-still in many fields and industries without them.
JS: Both you and your husband are controversial figures. Is that fun?

"I IMPOSED A LEGAL SENTENCE, AND THE PRESS BELIEVED I'D RELEASED A PREDATORY PEDOPHILE. THEY DIDN'T HAVE THE FACTS OF THE CASE."

ML: That label has been applied to us, and no, it's not fun. The people who describe us that way don't know us. It's like the label "activist judge." They slap that one on anyone they disagree with.
JS: One decision you made on the bench you wish you could reverse?
ML: There's nothing I wish I could reverse, but the one decision that had consequences I didn't anticipate was when I was a District Court judge. I ruled on the Matthew Rosenberg case. He was charged as a minor for murdering a neighbor, and I released him, as the law required, at age 22. As a result of that, juvenile laws were changed so that for certain offenses, minors are tried as adults. I think that decision was the beginning of the abandonment of rehabilitation for juveniles.
JS: Ebony Horton was sort of your coup de grace....
ML: Well, I'd say that I've had many coups de grace. [Laughs.]
JS: How do you think that ruling was misinterpreted?
ML: I imposed a legal sentence, and the press mistakenly believed I'd released a predatory pedophile. They didn't have the facts of the case.
JS: The Demoulas case: Isn't it just so sad to see a family torn apart over money?
ML: The saddest thing about it was that the lawyers involved would mix up the results of the system.
JS: That's because they were getting so rich off it.
ML: Well, that's what lawyers do, isn't it?
JS: Death penalty: pro or con?
ML: I'm against it. I think it's a philosophical and moral inconsistency for a society to say that it's because we value life so highly that we're going to take yours as a punishment.
JS: Worst thing you ever read about yourself?
ML: Oh, there have been so many.... I guess that I was arrogant.
JS: Which would you rather judge: The Mr. Universe pageant or American Idol*?*
ML: American Idol. I'd enjoy that more.
JS: To give Simon all kinds of shit?
ML: No, I kind of like Simon. I think what he does is for a purpose.
JS: Do you watch TV courtroom dramas?
ML: I never did until this opportunity came my way. I was never a TV watcher.
JS: Do you wear anything under the robe?
ML: Of course I do.
JS: You mean you never went naked under the robe?
ML: Only in fantasies.
JS: I thought judges did that all the time, like Scotsmen in kilts.
ML: I doubt it, although there was this one judge recently who was using a penile pump while he was on the bench. That's different than being naked, but I'd argue that it's worse.
JS: Hardest part of doing TV?
ML: Keeping up the stamina. It's a long day, and you have to be on all the time. I do eight cases a day. I start at 8:15 am an I'm not out of here until 6, 6:30 pm.
JS: If two women came to you claiming to b the mother of the same baby, how would you handle it?
ML: DNA test.
JS: Not take a sword and threaten to cut the baby in two?
ML: Like Solomon? No, I think a DN test would be less messy.
JS: Gay marriage: pro or con?
ML: I'm pro, and I do think that it'll be nonissue in the future, because I have ki that are 21 and 23 and I happen to kno that that age group doesn't care about t issue at all. For them, it's fine.
JS: Worst law on the books?
ML: Any mandatory sentencing law, b cause they take away discretion and tre every case and every defendant exactly t same. That's off the wall.
JS: Part of being on the bench that you miss the most?
ML: I actually don't miss anything about
JS: So what's going to separate you from all the other TV chatter?
ML: I bring to bear certain life experien that are unique to me. I'm an immigra and my personality, who I am, disti guishes me...
JS: Your firebrand personality?
ML: Yeah, that, and my civil rights exp ence—my identification with the und dog or the marginalized.
JS: So is there such a thing as justice, and i found in courtrooms?
ML: Absolutely, it exists, and I think y can get it in courtrooms, yes.
JS: Last question: Ever think of running fo office?
ML: Are you kidding? That's the last th I'd ever do. I would hate that world. IB

GOING FOR GUSTER

With smarter lyrics, richer textures and a new member, Ganging Up finds Guster growing up in more ways than one.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU PHOTOGRAPH BY LARISSA UNDERWOOD/LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

ntion Guster to many Boston rock fans and they'll remember an earnest indie-pop rio that sprang out of Tufts University with acoustic guitars and bongos in the arly '90s.

Plenty has changed since then, including the advent of more worldly lyrics, electric guitars, a real drum set, and a fourth member to help with bass and keyboards. ut with this year's winsome, atmospheric Ganging Up on the Sun, Guster has pened a new chapter, finally transcending its past image while expanding horions for the future.

"It's weird to be 14 years into your career and feel like you're right at the bottom f a curve," percussionist Brian Rosenworcel says from a tour stop in Kansas City, where the four members of Guster were reached for separate interviews. "That's ow we feel right now. We feel kind of liberated."

Ganging Up on the Sun earned glowing reviews from the New York Times and ther publications, and debuted in the Top 25 on the Billboard charts. Last nonth, the disc landed a Boston Music Award for major-label Album of the ear, even though Guster, oddly, wasn't nominated for Act of the Year.

"We never cared too much about whether we were recognized in the press," osenworcel says. "We always kind of flew under the radar and just toured and troked our egos with the fact that we had audiences who were loving us."

"Throughout our career," singer-guitarist Adam Gardner says, "we've been nislabeled. When we started out, we were a 'folk thing,' which we were ever. Then we were a 'jamband,' which we were never, because we had the rassroots following. Then we were a 'college thing,' and yeah, we met in ollege, but that's not what we are. Finally, with this record, we're starting o see comparisons to the Shins and Wilco—bands we really love and respect and listen to."

In any case, the cult of Guster has swelled to the point where the roup can pack venues as large as the 5,000-seat Bank of America Pavilon (where Guster played two nights in August) with largely young, ealous fans.

"A buddy of mine came to see us in Chicago last year," says singer-guitarist yan Miller, "and he said to us, 'How is it that you guys have been a band for nore than 10 years and your audience is still all these college kids?'

"Our live shows tend to skew to college and high school because that's hen the most people are going out to see shows," says Miller, acknowldging he still sees some older fans with copies of the trio's 1994 debut, arachute, issued under the band name Gus until another artist laid laim to that name. "It keeps the energy there and allows us to try new hings, because nobody wants to be a nostalgia act."

Younger fans also appreciate such witty hijinks as the band mem-ers' riding to the Pavilion stage on Segway scooters, wearing helnets, to the tune of "Born to Be Wild." But those antics don't hapen everywhere. "It's just Boston, mostly," Miller says. "Boston has ertain expectations.

"We realized somewhere along the way that what we put out onage, even how you address the audience, goes a long way toward reating a very convivial environment," he says. "I saw Radiohead ecently and there was none of that. That's fine, they put on a reat show and that's not their M.O. For us, when things feel imromptu, it makes people feel special. When we have great ideas, e try to follow through with them. The Segways were one of our nore inspired ideas."

Another inspired idea was playing with the Boston Pops, inugurating the "Pops on the Edge" series last year. "It was instantly, viscerally amazing," says Gardner, "as soon as we heard a 100-piece orchestra playing behind us, on songs we'd written." His side project, the LeeVees—known for last year's holiday hit "How Do You Spell Channukkahh?"—has been in talks to play this season with the Pops.

More ideas have blossomed in the studio since 1999's Lost and Gone Forever, after which Guster ditched restrictions like Rosenworcel's hand percussion. With Nashville multi-instrumentalist Joe Pisapia graduating from a tour backup musician to writing and recording as a full-fledged member, Ganging Up on the Sun has become the signal of a new dawn.

"Joe became indispensable very quickly," says Rosenworcel, while Pisapia says of his bandmates' open-minded eagerness in the studio, "Everybody has that beginner's mind. That's what I enjoy about working with these guys."

The difference is reflected on Ganging Up on the Sun, which ranges from the lush pop pulse of "Satellite" to the Byrds-like "C'mon" to the seven-minute "Ruby Falls," which hints at Pink Floyd with its loping rock beat, electric chording, high-scaling synthesizer solo and jazzy trumpet coda.

On the lyrical side, the CD balances its brightness with introspective cynicism. And in "One Man Wrecking Machine," Miller mulls returning to high school to chart his course differently—from a wiser, cooler adult perspective.

"I was nerdy and never got the girl," says Dallas native Miller, now married in his early 30s, as are both the New Jersey–bred Gardner and, as of this fall, Rosenworcel, who grew up in Connecticut. "All musicians are sort of that way, aren't they? That's the whole reason that they're musicians—'cause they weren't jocks, quarterbacks or homecoming kings. I was just awkward in high school, and college and post-college was when I grew into myself."

The three met as Tufts freshmen in 1991, launched the band the following year, and started busking in Harvard Square and playing college parties. The group eventually attracted bookers for the Paradise. "They knew if they had a national act coming in and they weren't quite filling the room that we were good for 200 people on a moment's notice," Gardner says.

By 2004, the group was on its way, selling out the Paradise on its own and letting fans become "Guster reps" to spread the word nationally. "We just developed a system where if people wanted CDs for their friends, we gave them CDs," Rosenworcel says. "It was kind of like a precursor to the Internet and downloading. The most important thing is that people get the music, and worry about the rest later."

Guster is still spreading the word, and not just about the music. Last spring, the group combined environmentalism and community service on the 24-stop Campus Consciousness Tour, offsetting the power used to run the shows with renewable energy and running the tour buses on biodiesel fuel.

The band has maintained the practice. "We just filled up the bus," says Gardner, cofounder of the environmental nonprofit Reverb. "It's 15 cents more a gallon for biodiesel, but that's worth it to know we're reducing our carbon dioxide."

When Guster finally takes a break from touring, Rosenworcel says, "The real challenge is going to be writing a bunch of songs that are better than these [on Ganging Up on the Sun]. That's what we're gearing up to do, to keep trying to make the classic album that I think we're meant to make." iB

"Throughout our career we've been mislabeled. Finally, with this record, we're starting to see comparisons to the Shins and Wilco—bands we really love and respect and listen to." –Adam Gardner, singer-guitarist

10 Bands That Rock

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Boston's music scene features gifted young hopefuls—buoyed by some familiar faces

It's not a coincidence that many of Boston's top local rock outfits—even those with members in their 20s—are led by veterans of at least one other notable band. Both talent and experience matter for the majority of these acts that are making waves on the scene.

The Rudds

When the Rudds hit T.T. the Bear's for a Halloween weekend tribute to '80s popsters Hall & Oates, singer John Powhida gets to channel Daryl Hall, letting headshorter guitarist and singer Brett Rosenberg assume the part of John Oates.

Maybe Powhida will sport the blond wig he donned in 2004 for a similar tribute to Cheap Trick, another one of his biggest influences. And we can't wait for a Rudds tribute to Todd Rundgren, whom Powhida resembles physically as well. "I copped a lot of time singing to his records," Powhida says. "When push comes to shove, Todd is my favorite guy."

The bracing mix of power pop and Philly soul in those acts follows the charismatic Albany native into his own writing, and he's scored with the Rudds. It's an all-star lineup: Rosenberg and singer Andrea Gillis (who front their own groups), bassist Tony Goddess (from Papa Fritas), drummer Nathan Logus (Baby Ray) and keyboardist Dave Lieb.

Powhida is glad he moved to Boston in 2000, when he was 34. "I seemed so ancient to have to crack this new scene, and it did take a while," he says. "Endurance pays off."

The Rudds are rustling up a follow-up to 2005's lauded Get the Femuline Hang On, and Powhida predicts a more roots-oriented effort. "People expect us to take chances," he says. "I feel encouraged to walk on the wild side."

He also enjoys his job as a security guard at the Museum of Fine Arts. "It's a great place to work on lyrics or stage banter," he says. "All I have is time, and thoughts in my head."

The Rudds play Oct. 28 at T.T. the Bear's Place.

Hooray for Earth

Let singer-guitarist Noel Heroux loose in his practice-space studio, and styles collide in a fuzzy mash-up. Like the Smashing Pumpkins' Billy Corgan, Heroux touches on grunge in the ambitious process of achieving pop grandeur. But he'll just as easily echo '80s synth-pop or Enya-like New Age (including samples that range from classical music to the sound of a dropped coffee mug) and soak it in bass.

"I just like big, gross guitar sounds, and I also like to tune the guitars really low because they sound scarier," Heroux says. "And we joke about Enya, but it's true: I love Enya, and I love big, silly keyboard patches and lots of reverb."

All those sounds converge on his band Hooray for Earth's eponymous debut, two-thirds of which was recorded in the practice space. Heroux ran guitars through an old computer ("I'd just plug everything straight into the computer, not any proper recording gear," he says), which can account for the disc's distorted quality.

Nonetheless, Heroux's vocal melodies rise above the sonic wash. "I like being simple," he says. "I wanted a dense sound with busy chords and harmonic stuff, but wanted people to hear a melody line they could catch onto."

The CD practically became a one-man project when the group couldn't afford studio time. But now that the record's finished, Heroux enjoys more support onstage from bassist Chris Principe (a Grafton High schoolmate from the mid-'90s who played with him in the group Raymond), keyboardist-guitarist Gary Benacquista and drummer Seth Kasper, the group's live secret weapon with his flamboyant slamming.

Hooray for Earth plays Dec. 1 at Great Scott.

Letia Larok

Being a female rapper in a predominantly male field isn't the only way that Leti Larok trumps expectations. For starters, she tackles rhymes with authority. "Peo ple say, 'Onstage you're like an animal, and offstage you're chill and humble,' Larok says. "It's all me inside."

In turn, Larok is also an engaging singer, complementing her keen rhythmi flow with gifts for melody and harmony. Her debut, As Is, suggests Destiny's Chil on harmonically sophisticated tracks like "Misunderstood," but Larok and pro ducer Dr. Richie Kimball didn't need backup singers. She arranges her own vo cals, seamlessly layered to the beats.

"It's a very hip-hop influence, whether I'm singing or rapping," says Larok, Roxbury native raised in Chelsea. "It's all the same genre, but different expre sions."

To top it off, Larok slips into Jamaican toasting on the CD's dancehall trac "Let It Go." She was born of West Indian parents, and her Antiguan stepfathe played roots reggae around the home. At age 9, Larok sang in an all-city choi then moved on to dancing, poetry and rap.

In 2003 she caught some breaks, opening for Kelly Rowland of Destiny's Chi and appearing on UPN's Showtime at the Apollo. But Larok passed on an overtu from Universal after the label wanted to set her up with a pop producer.

"I was in the driver's seat with my foot on the gas and didn't know where I w going," says Larok, 23, who still knew her style was more conscious hip-hop. "B now I feel very comfortable if the opportunity comes again."

Letia Larok plays Nov. 24 at the Milky Way.

Black Helicopter

Less is more for Black Helicopter. Especially when compared with all four members' previous group, the early-'90s outfit Green Magnet School, Black Helicopter sounds stripped down and straightforward. The results are more accessible, if still dark and heavy.

"Green Magnet School was more fragmented, with busy bass lines, and now the guitars and bass work together," singer-guitarist Tim Shea says of his evolution with guitarist Jeff Iwanicki, bassist Zack Lazar and drummer Matt Nicholas. "Everyone is at least in the same ballpark, and it tends to reinforce a thicker sound.

"I definitely don't think it's too dense," says Shea, who engineered the band's new CD Invisible Jet, released on Sonic Youth leader Thurston Moore's Ecstatic Peace label. "I was driving around, listening to see what we needed and what was extraneous. We didn't go crazy with overdubs."

The emphasis instead falls on tone, mood and the songs themselves. Themes touch on alcoholism, infidelity and remorse, which seem par for the course with Shea. On Black Helicopter's previous CD, That Specific Function, he based lyrics on the drunken ramblings of a man who frequented a convenience store where Shea and Nicholas worked.

"I try to keep a sense of humor about it too, but I don't know if it comes across," Shea says. "Reviews assume that I have a couple of screws loose. But it doesn't seem so dark to me. Without it being spooky or gothic, the dark side is more interesting."

Black Helicopter plays Nov. 11 at O'Brien's.

Bang Camaro

Guitarist Bryn Bennett had a common reaction to seeing photos of his band Bang Camaro at its first club shows.

"You couldn't tell where the crowd stopped and we began," Bennett says. "We really bring a feel-good atmosphere, and people feel like they're part of the band." Of course, with more than a dozen singers joining five instrumentalists onstage, Bang Camaro feels like part of the crowd, too.

The buzz is deafening, especially for a year-old band that's fueled by '80s metal, prompting sing-alongs like "Push, Push (Lady Lightning)!"

When Bennett and guitarist Alex Necochea had shared bill with their respective indie-rock groups the Model Sons and the Good North, Bennett says, "We always ended up talking abou Ozzy and Metallica." So when they formed a new band, practices always came back to hard rock. "We wanted those De Leppard gang vocals and didn't know how to do it," he says. "S we grabbed as many friends as we could."

The Choir was born. Depending on availability, between 11 and 20 singers line up behind the core quintet and let the bee and testosterone fly—at rehearsals as well as shows. "There's lot of dude power," Bennett says.

"I don't view ourselves as a novelty act," he says. "In a way it a guilty pleasure, but the best heavy metal from the '80s wer good pop bands." Fans are buying MP3s off the Bang Camar Web site in advance of an eventual album, and a documentar is being filmed. And while the Camaro may have limited stay ing power, Bennett says, "We know we're incredibly lucky. It just a cool ride to be on."

Bang Camaro plays Dec. 31 downstairs at the Middle East.

Taxpayer

Jared Marsh planted the see for Taxpayer with future ban mates Rob Adams and Mik Jones in his North Shore bac yard during middle school. "W were meeting in a tent one nig smoking cigarettes and drinki liquor when we shouldn't hav and decided it would be amazi if we all picked up instruments Marsh says. "It took a while t develop because of directions everyone's lives."

Those directions woun through college and resolved Taxpayer when, Marsh say "We all got jobs and realize that nobody wanted to just g home and watch TV anymore."

The punk idols that had fir inspired them as kids ("Min Threat was something we cou play," he says; "Fugazi was t complex") had been surpasse by the Pixies (whom Taxpay will cover on Halloween at t Middle East) and Radiohead.

Singer-guitarist Marsh, drum mer Adams, guitarist Jones a bassist Tim Peters luckily g to record their 2005 debu Bones and Lungs, with produc Paul Kolderie, who overs Radiohead's first album. Ta payer began paying in full w its own bristling, melodica eager rock.

Marsh is already writing a anxious to make another albu especially since he quit smoki a year ago (after coughing blood from a partially collaps lung), which only improved singing. "It was an awakenin he says.

Taxpayer is democratic in writing ("Even if one memb doesn't like something, throw it out," he says) and m record over a longer period. you record in a two-week sp it's only representative of tho two weeks," Marsh says. "I want the full picture in the d velopment of the band."

Taxpayer plays Dec. 2 at Great Scott.

Frank Smith

Aaron Sinclair likes to mix it up. He carved a reputation as a progressive punk rocker around town, fronting Drexel on guitar and vocals, then drumming with the Lot Six. These days he's strapping on an acoustic guitar and harmonica to lead the group Frank Smith down gloomy alt-country byways.

"If you're gonna play in a few bands, you can't be playing the same kind of music," he says. "That's the point of starting a new band."

Frank Smith began as a side project to the Lot Six, which plays its final show Nov. 16 at the Middle East. "We just ran our course," Sinclair says. "We're all still friendly."

The Lot Six's Dan Burke plays bass in Frank Smith, which also includes Eyes Like Knives guitarist Scott Toomey, ex–Stray Bullets drummer Drew Roach and former Drexel foil Marc Flynn, who joined on keyboards. But the group's sound is sealed through banjo player Brett Saiia and pedal steel ace Steve Malone, who worked with Jake Brennan.

"We were just good friends and musicians, and the stylistic part doesn't factor in—it was just good music," Sinclair says. "It varies a bit, but there's a similar vein running down the middle of it. It's not country and it's not rock, but a mix of that. It's down to getting a good song across, and it doesn't matter what classification it falls into.

"I didn't listen to a lot of this music when I was younger," says the Houston native, who turns 30 Nov. 12. "Tastes tend to widen when you're older."

The Campaign for Real-Time

Ignore the electronic trappings; the Campaign for Real-Time is the most punk-rock band in town. At least that's the opinion of co-frontman Lee "Big Game" Bronson, C4RT's prime agitator, who plays off singer-guitarist Rory Stark and barrels into the crowd for face-to-face throwdowns.

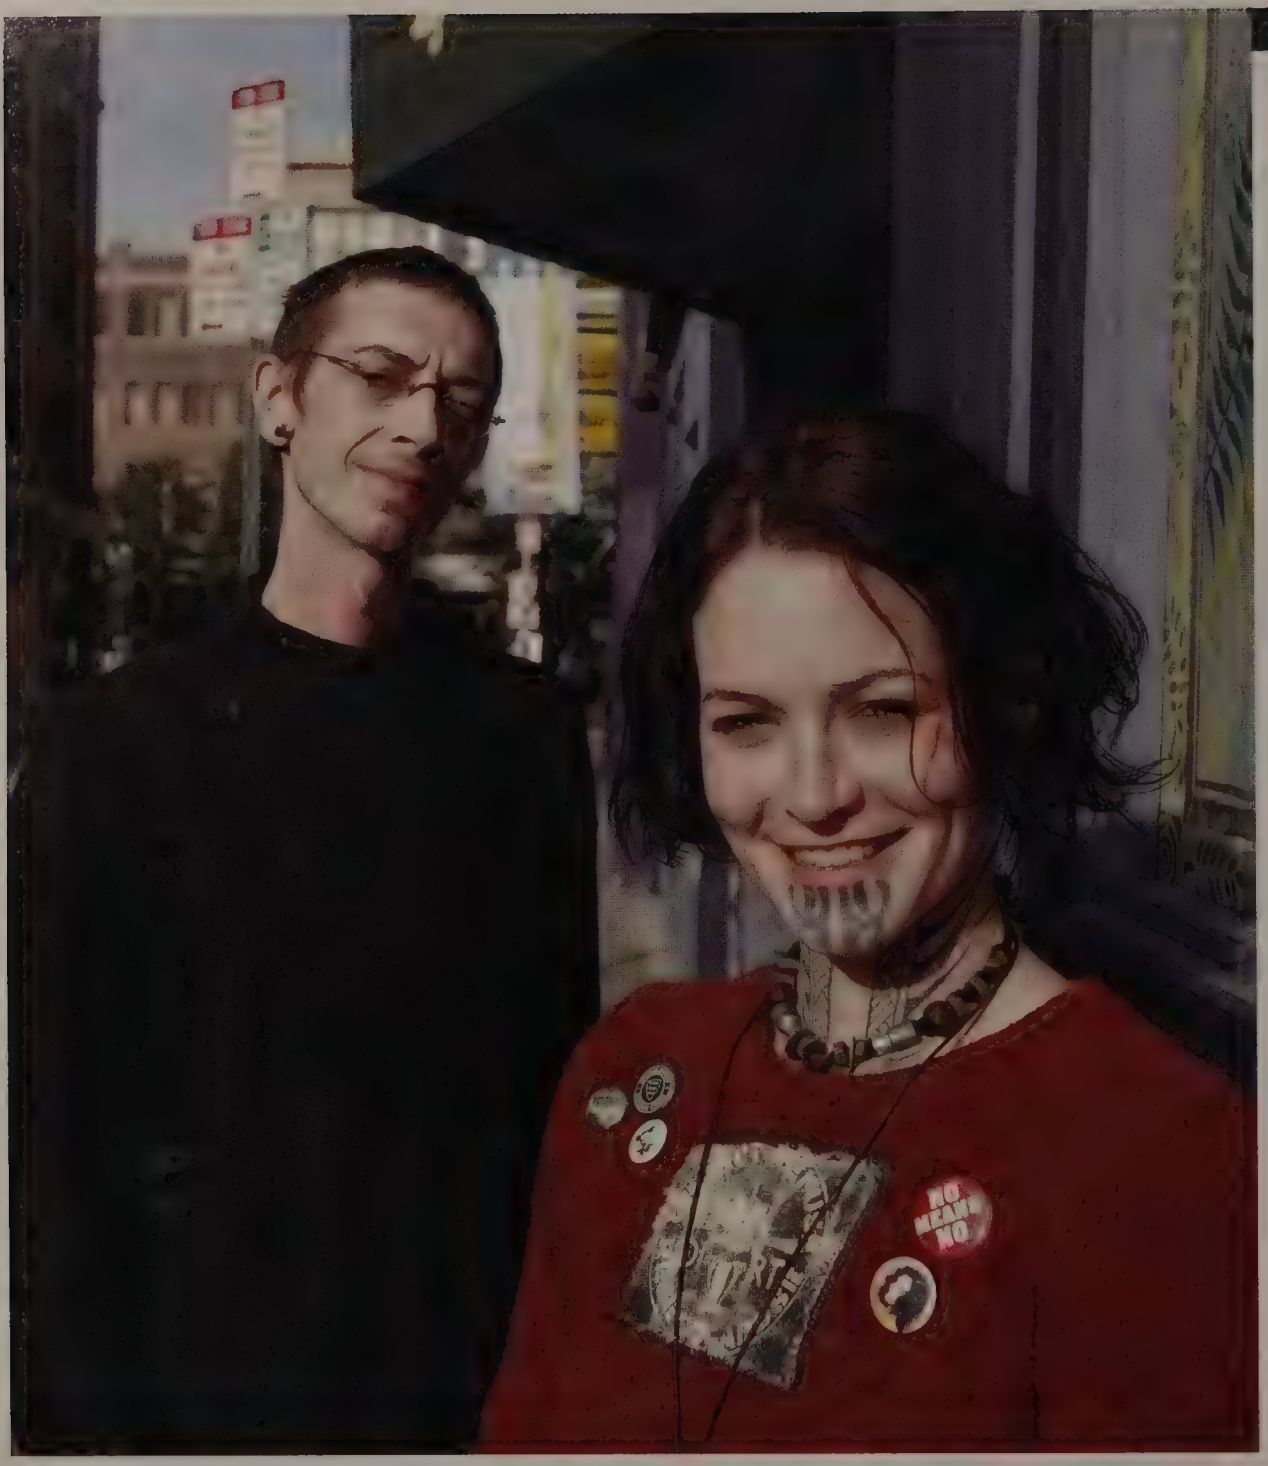
"We want a visceral connection with the audience," Bronson says of the group, which won both this year's WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble and a Boston Music Award for the indie album Yes... I Mean, No. "Rock should be dangerous. But it's all light-hearted at the end of the day. I'm sure I'll get punched in the face someday, but it hasn't happened."

The music, in turn, is a rush of colliding elements capped with tag-team vocals both sung and rapped. "It's a chaotic act, both in terms of personality and art, but that's what makes it interesting," he says before the band's second tour of the U.K. "We're like cats. We end up on our feet."

Influences range from the sonic grooves of Krautrock and British grime to the bullish trade-offs of Public Enemy and Wu-Tang Clan—and that's just for founders Bronson and Stark. "In a sense, it's a huge melting pot of everybody's influences," Bronson says of the pseudonym-heavy band, which includes alumni from Garrison and Cracktorch.

Felix Coyote and Falconer Model 7 alternate on analog and digital synthesizers with Bronson, while Dick Dreyfus and Dr. Hemnesphere respectively hold down the drums and bass. And they all play to a computer loop onstage. "We spend an obscene amount of time arranging," says Bronson, "but when we're on an instrument, we ARE performing."

The Campaign for Real-Time plays Nov. 11 and 12 at Great Scott.



Humanwine

Holly Brewer grew up down the block from Dresden Do drummer Brian Viglione in Greenville, N.H. But the sing says she hadn't been in touch with Viglione since the thi grade—and hadn't even heard the Dolls' music—until s and her guitarist-singer husband M@ (Matt) McNiss mov their vaudeville-slanted band Humanwine to Boston la year.

Viglione introduced her to Beat Circus' Brian Carpent who joined Humanwine's floating lineup along with me bers of Reverend Glasseye. "There's a camaraderie, not a m sical influence," Brewer says of all those acts. "We were the popular students in school. We were the drama studen and freaks."

She and McNiss launched Humanwine in 2002 in Lac nia, N.H., fueled by their creative contrasts. He was in jazz, Tom Waits and Sonic Youth, while Brewer was wean on Diamanda Galas, Cyndi Lauper and (no kidding) Ju Andrews.

"I grew up in a singing household, where my mother w like Maria in The Sound of Music," says Brewer, who migrat from musicals to industrial music and political punk. She l the road, became a squatter and got tattoos on her throat a chin. "Then I realized you could mix the ugly and the pret As long as you could keep the music easy on the ears, peo couldn't tell it was political."

Still, someone nominated Humanwine for a Boston Mu Award under the Punk Band category. "It's not about safe pins and fashion, it's about an anarchist outlook," she sa The band lost that prize, but won for Best New Local Act.

"I want to make movie soundtracks when I grow u Brewer says, and she and McNiss already have visuals mind: Their songs depict a postapocalyptic world called V land. "Fans started dressing up as characters," she says. "I lo The Rocky Horror Picture Show, and when they did that, it couraged me to document what Vinland looks like on Web site."

Humanwine plays Nov. 17 at T.T. the Bear's Place.

The Konks

Kurt Davis opines that his band the Konks operates as one of Boston's most "improper" bands. "We're kind of a sloppy mess," he says. "We're not very slick or professional, or particularly career-minded. We do what we do."

What the Konks do is bash out minimalist garage-blues-punk that has roots in Bo Diddley, Howlin' Wolf, Link Wray and the Stooges. "Anything raw, primal and energetic," Davis says. "It's more about feeling than technical ability."

It started in the back room of Mystery Train, the Central Square record store where Davis and Bob Wilson worked in the late '90s. With Wilson on guitar and Jon Porth on bass, Davis ended up on the "two lousy drums" noted in the song "29 Fingers," from the Konks' eponymous 2005 album.

"Originally I intended to just be the singer and get a drummer," he says. "I didn't even have a snare stand. We had a couple of record crates in the back room and used them."

Davis had prior experience as both a drummer (including in the band Kustomized, led by Mission of Burma's Peter Prescott) and a singer. Under the name Yukki Gipe, he fronted the punk-metal band Bullet LaVolta, which once played between the Smashing Pumpkins and Nirvana at an Axis radio show just before the release of Nevermind.

"That was a crazy night—there was something in the air, and it was pretty exciting," he says, adding of his LaVolta days, "Those were probably the best times of my life."

The Konks play Nov. 20 at T.T. the Bear's Place. iB

CUE THE LIGHTS

BY LINDA LABAN

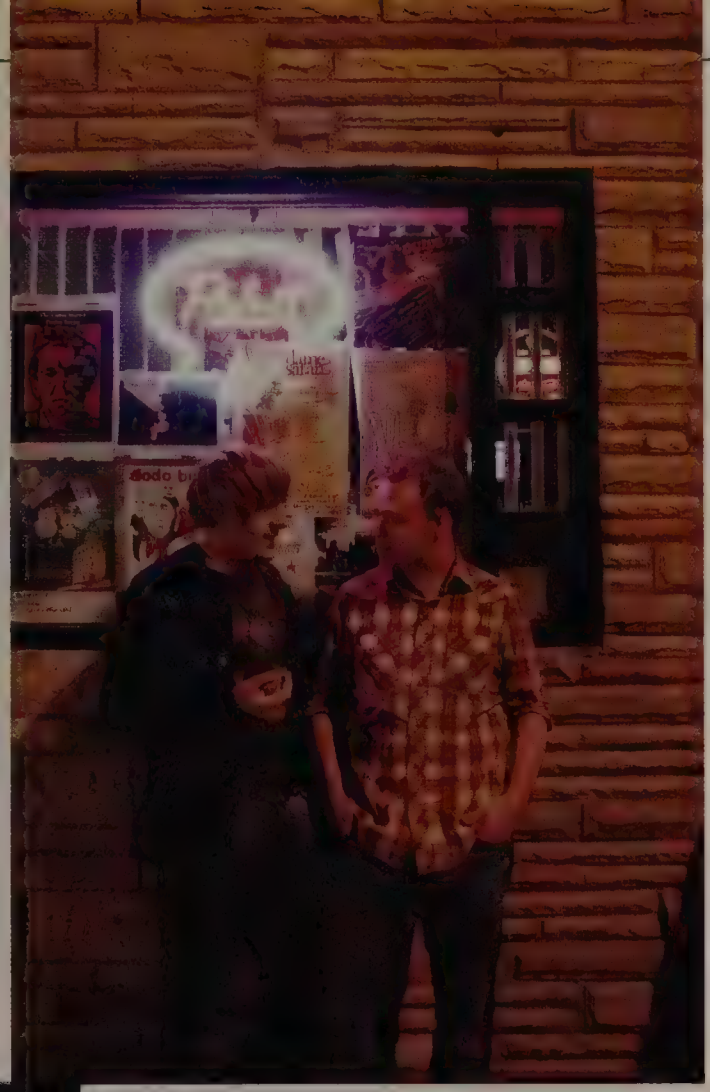
Most music fans flock to Central Square, Lansdowne Street and Allston to see and hear live music. But there's more to the Hub-area live pop/punk/rock scene than Avalon, Axis, the Paradise, Great Scott, the Middle East and T.T.'s. If you're looking to get off the beaten club path, check out some of these neighborhood spots.

SKYBAR 518 Somerville Ave., Somerville, 617-623-5223

The Skybar used to be a hideous sports bar with a stage tucked away at one end the room. Punk was the order of most nights, with hardened dedicated fans a locals populating the place. That was the old Skybar. Renovations a year or so a moved the stage to the center of the room, making the bands easily visible fro any position. Also, subtler lighting and sound buffering added to the ambian (The bar still serves drinks in plastic containers, which seems at odds with t more sophisticated surroundings.) Overall, the renovations produced a really ni venue, with a large stage and much better sound. Booking, however, rema niche-oriented: Goth nights, roots rock and mostly local bands. But a new booki team took over this summer, so who knows? With the right live-band progra ming, the Skybar could put this blighted stretch of Somerville Ave. on the mu map. Cover varies, around $7.

PA'S LOUNGE 345 Somerville Ave., Somerville, 617-776-1557

Thanks to more eclectic indie and experimental rock programming over the past couple of years, PA's Lounge has gained a reputation as a place to experience innovative music from artists on the rise. The PA stands for Portuguese American Club, which is what this bar and music venue originally opened as. Now it's an inclusive venue with a separate bar area, where regulars (clearly not interested in music) gather, especially on weekends, looking like they're knocking back brews in their "third room," as Starbucks would have it. The music space is decoratively uninspiring and quite plain—in order to make more room, most of the banquette seating was removed. On a busy night that works fine, but on quieter ones, especially if the music's subdued, you long to recline. Still, this is the place to catch interesting up-and-comers, great local underground veterans and niche out-of-towners such as John Mellencamp's onetime violinist, singer Lisa Germano, who headlined in early October. Cover ranges from $5 to $10.



LIZARD LOUNGE

1667 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-547-0759

This casual basement venue below the Cambridge Common restaurant is one of the best places to experience live music. The small room has no stage, just rugs placed centrally to denote the performance area. That means artists and audience are eye-to-eye and within touching distance—and the occasional big names appearing on the floor, such as Michael Penn and James Hunter, make this quite a thrill. But even with lesser-known performers, it's a more real experience than the standard music-business separation of artist and listener. The food, from the Common's kitchen, is excellent American bar fare. Early in the evening, Tuesday through Saturday, there's a free show called Soul Low, featuring local and visiting artists performing solo (get it?). It's mostly singer-songwriter types, from pop to folk to rock. After 9 pm, the main event kicks in, with a cover charge of around $7 to $10.

JACQUES UNDERGROUND

79 Broadway, Boston, 617-426-8902

Everybody knows the colorful Jacques, the drag bar/cabaret tucked away on a tiny side street in Boston's Theatre District. But hidden below is a basement bar, where you'll find an interesting lineup of rock bands performing on weekends. It's best to check with the venue for details, but recent drop-ins have found experimental rock and power pop acts, and even ex–Cave In member Steven Brodsky making like Buddy Holly and performing '50s rock and roll covers, solo with an acoustic guitar. It's also a great place for up-and-coming bands to cut their teeth. With consistent booking, this could be the gritty, CBGB-style downtown live-music venue that Boston sorely lacks. Admission is $10, which covers entrance to both upstairs and down.

ATWOOD'S TAVERN

877 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-864-2792

After housing a regular punk/alternative music lineup for some time, the small Overdraught Pub in Inman Square fizzled and closed almost a year ago. But a different sect of Cantabrigians—roots rock fans—are benefiting from the Overdraught's replacement, Atwood's Tavern, which opened in April. The new owners plan on making live music a main focus (as in, a seven-nights-a-week schedule), but until licensing allows, shows are confined to Thursday through Saturday. The interior's been revamped with new wood floors to lighten up the formerly dark and gritty space. The new stage is in the same corner at the rear of the bar, but the main additions are a new PA system and a soundproofed ceiling. The venue features a blues, roots rock and bluegrass lineup of all-local artists—currently highlighted by the Friday night residency of dusty heartland rockers the Tim Gearan Band. Home-cooked comfort food goes down well with the bar's straight-up country-rock vibe. There's no cover charge at the moment, and the plan is to keep it that way. IB

MATT MURPHY'S PUB

14 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-232-0188

Matt Murphy's is many things to many people: a comfy neighborhood bar, a great casual place to eat or a lively club with bands performing nightly. The style of music ranges from jazz to pop to reggae to funk, with many artists taking up residence on a particular night. For instance, Sunday night is Mang Dub, a roots reggae–inspired evening featuring Boston Afrobeat Society as the house band. Tuesday night it's Public House with jazz guitarist Geoff Scott holding court. Friday is old-school funk and R&B featuring the likes of Toussaint and the China Band. Matt Murphy's also started its own label to record performances and transfer them to CD—an excellent opportunity for newer bands. Whatever's happening, there's never a cover charge.

lands. In fact, two of this city's most popular podasts, Band in Boston and The Mongrel's Howl, concentrate exclusively on Boston music and local live hows, respectively.

Sweet programs his podcast from his Bostonrea home for Paste magazine, and he receives eedback from listeners from as far afield as Portand, Ore., and Ukraine. His Boston pride comes hrough in his podcast, where he feeds listeners a teady diet of New England–area artists. Recent cts have included Apollo Sunshine, Grace Potter nd Sonya Kitchell, as well as Bang Camaro, folowing their "hilariously kick-ass set" at this year's oston Music Awards.

The podcast is also becoming increasingly imortant for terrestrial radio. WXRV, the River, will pon begin podcasting its River Music Hall, instudio acoustic performances. Radio stations are ffering exclusive extras to listeners who wish to elve further into a particular artist's catalogue or musical genre. By posting interviews and unreased, rare or live tracks, stations hope to give the udience more of what they crave and increase lisener loyalty. A podcast from a radio station has a milar feel to its satellite radio competitors, generlly having one sponsor per podcast and 10-second umper ads rather than commercial breaks, resulting in little interruption.

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

THE SPIRIT WANTS THE GOOD STUFF FOR YOU

The Greater Boston Church of Spiritualism (32 Church St., Watertown; 617-923-4334; healergbcs@hotmail.com) meets Sundays at 2:30 pm. Services include spontaneous "Platform Medium" readings of congregants. Six-week classes on spiritualism are available for $50. Medium readings are held every fourth Saturday, 11 am–3 pm.

At the Greater Boston Church of Spiritualism, Pastor Mary Di Giovanni delivers the sermon, elaborating a spiritual attitude toward some real-life situation or dilemma. Just before Di Giovanni's lost dog was found, she experienced her own self, uncannily, as having shorter hair and clipped nails near to someone wearing heavy shoes. Indeed, an older lady had found and groomed her dog. This reunion focused Mary on giving her dog more love, better attention. As a medium, she moves toward willing congregants and speaks lightly, easily, to that person, giving messages from the spirit of a loved one, the so-called dead. Identifying the departed message bringer ("She wears a crocheted shawl, she likes to make things..."), Di Giovanni brings to the person a spiritual-therapeutic message that's helpful on several levels, incorporating appreciation, gentle advice or redirection ("Don't let your worries and care for others keep you from enjoying and taking care of yourself"). Afterward, those who want to feel "pure love flowing through them" gather to experience a healing, reiki-like laying-on of hands. These friendly spiritualists envisage and encourage a river-like continuity of positive, relaxing, heart-widening "vibrations" traveling from this side to the other side, and back again.

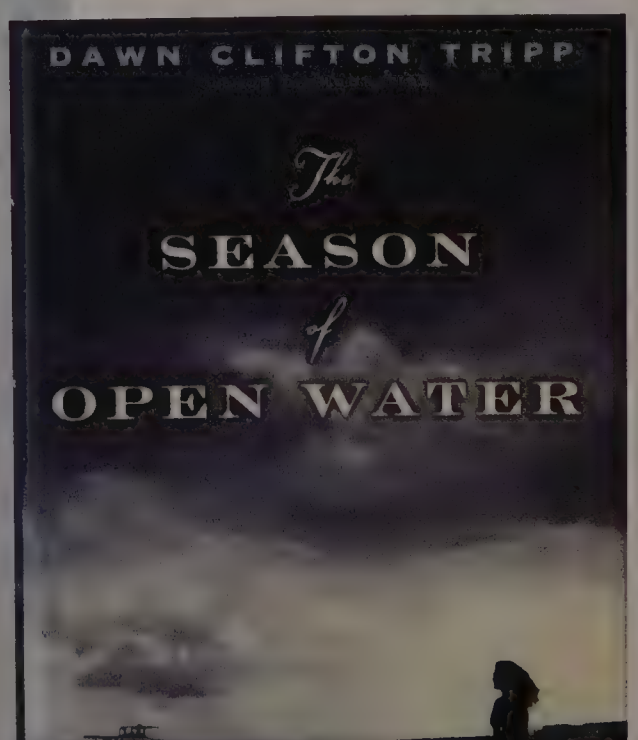
I DON'T EVEN PLAY ONE ON TV

M&S Police Supply (6 Main St., Somerville; 617-628-4444) sells to both policemen and civilians.

The officialdom of a uniform casts a fascinating allure, but ordinarily you see it with the pertinent person inside. Here, these symbolically important clothes are disembodied. Although the police store, of course, sells its uniforms only to actual, insignia-bearing officers, there are also things available to ordinary (and we hope innocent) citizens. A big black jacket with a large fire truck embroidered on it looks somehow celebratory, minus any disasters. And the upright-looking, no-sweat poplin shirts, in navy, light blue and white—and dress pants—could be donned by any regular honest guy or gal. So could the very solid boots and shoes that police, SWAT and fire personnel wear. The Original Tactical Air Boots are all leather, some are waterproof, and with their thick, thick soles, they look ready to stride confidently across vast landscapes, urban or otherwise. They're designed, given their intendeds' long standup duties, to be merciful on long-suffering backs, knees and ankles. M&S also sells motorcycle boots. Various nonofficial items have a police inflection: a keychain with a fat, dangling bullet, jokey hats (Witness Protection Program), pepper spray (requiring a permit) and scary-looking gas masks. And Sept. 11 statues touchingly commemorate the official heroes of the disaster.

BY THE BEAUTIFUL, DANGEROUS SEA

Harvard graduate Dawn Clifton Tripp's second novel, Season of Open Water, is about the 1920s rumrunning trade in Westport, Mass.



It almost seems as if Dawn Clifton Tripp is writing from inside nature, speaking in the language of sea grass, the flight of crows and the bright light splitting off the ocean. It's from this haunting perspective, in kinship with Westport in southern Massachusetts, that she tells the story of rumrunners in the late 1920s. Some might've made it into a noisy tale. But Tripp writing in the present tense and speaking from the separate viewpoints of her characters, keeps it almost dreamy. Several generations of boat builders and fishermen are lured into the opportunity that the harbor, its quiet coves and the secret lanes of the town afforded illegal rum transport. The story pivots around Luce and her sister Bridge, siblings so resonantly close as to be almost incestuous, and Henry, a subtle, almost mysterious man of higher social class, a doctor veteran of World War I who falls in love with Bridge—herself independent, solitudinous. The love affair is less about differences in social class and age than about synchronicity of souls (or lack thereof). There's subtle drama, when these soft locals become part of this exciting, lucrative danger. They connect in new and disturbing ways with the rich locals, while also chafing against their own families' values.

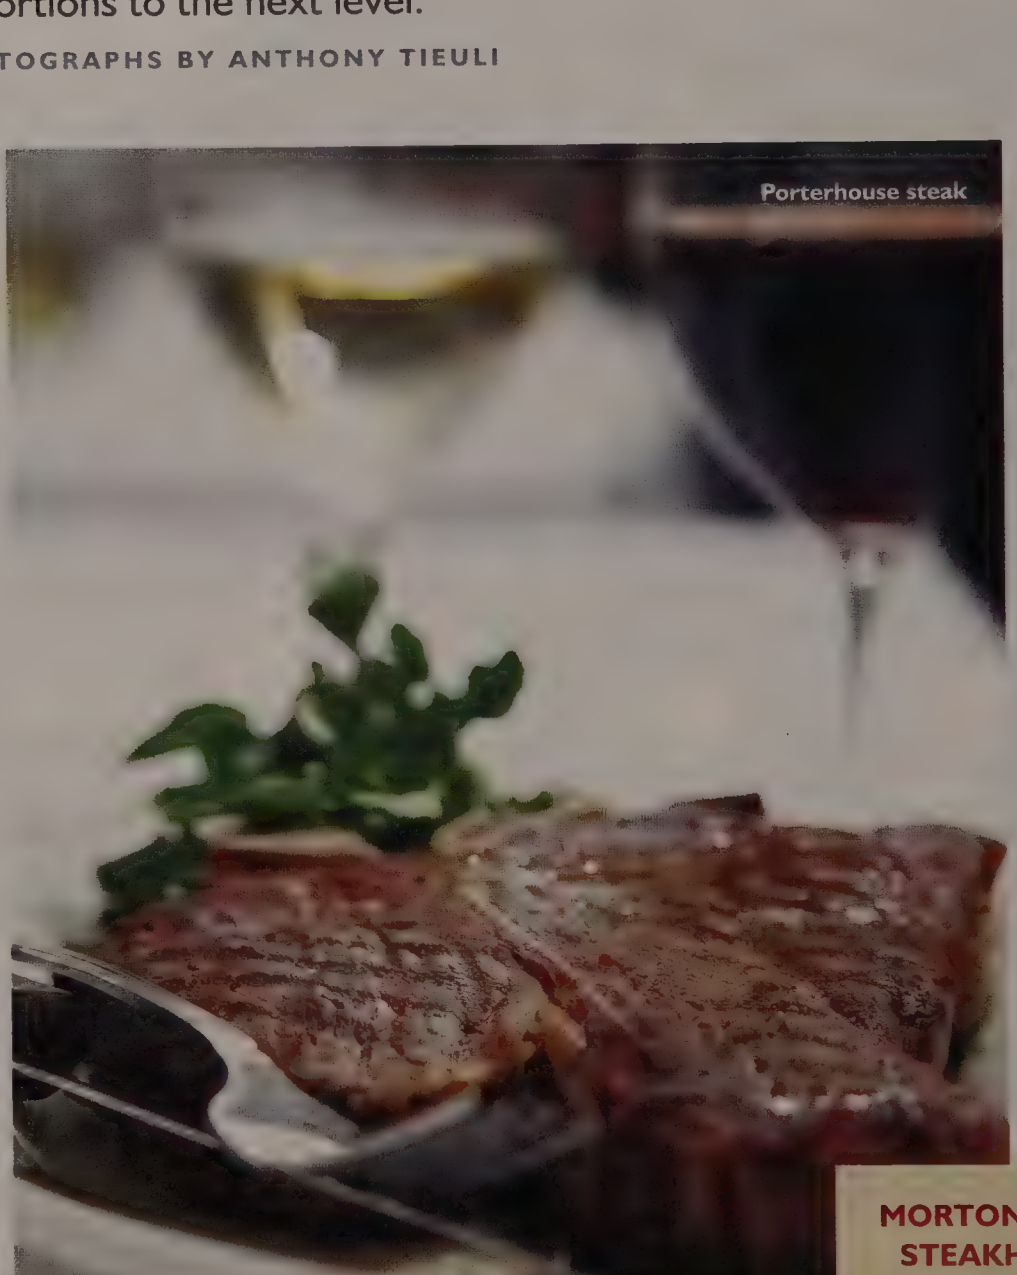
TITANIC TASTINGS

Morton's takes steakhouse portions to the next level.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Morton's of Boston is hard to find, thanks to unobtrusive signage, below-grade space and access, as the building security attendant told us, down one flight, via the third elevator on the left. Only a restaurant with extreme confidence in its food would dare to hide in so obscure a venue. I'm happy to report that its confidence is, for the most part, well placed.

When you arrive at Morton's windowless dining room, on the lower level of a building on Boylston Street near Exeter, you have the feeling of entering a private club, with framed photographs of old Boston landmarks and notables such as the fish market, the North End's equestrian statue of Paul Revere, and local sports greats Babe Ruth and Ted Williams. Exposed bricks, a smattering of leaded stained glass, crisp white tablecloths, and art deco sconces create a pleasant setting. While the dining room looks small and exclusive, it actually accommodates more than 100 patrons at well-spaced tables, booths and banquettes. Since the space is currently undergoing major renovations, including the addition of a new, proper entrance from the street, the dining room's contours and décor may change, but there's little risk that the kitchen will change its time-tested game plan: Give them good food, and plenty of it.



Porterhouse steak

As we perused the menu—which lists about a dozen appetizers, a half dozen salads, almost 20 main courses and a dozen sides of vegetables and potatoes—the waiter brought a large boule of warm bread, its chewy crust embedded with minced fried onions. This carbohydrate incursion on the restaurant's unabashed red meat regime proved irresistible, and to compensate I refrained from ordering the celebrated baked Idaho potato ($6.50), the size of a small locomotive. Instead I ordered the jumbo lump crab cake ($12) for an appetizer. The menu—which is the same whether you're visiting the Morton's in Boston, Burbank or Boca Raton—uses the word "jumbo" six times, and "colossal" three times, and although the menu writer could have used a thesaurus, I couldn't quarrel with the description. The crab cake, at least twice as large as the standard appetizer-size crab cake in most area restaurants, contained almost nothing but crab, enlivened with a combination of herbs, minced peppers and shallots. The delicate, pleasantly sweet crabmeat made the tangy mustard mayonnaise sauce, pretty good in its own right, almost superfluous. The "colossal" shrimp Alexander ($16) brought three crustaceans; whether they were jumbo or colossal we couldn't tell, but they were big. Their perfect crunchy texture and lively shrimp flavor—along with a splendid beurre blanc that drove me back to the warm bread to mop my plate clean—made the offering a winner.

The sea scallops wrapped in bacon ($13) afforded no surprises: large, succulent, sweet scallops gently sautéed to perfect texture, wrapped with slices of meaty bacon, rich in its smoky sweetness, and accompanied by a superb spicy apricot chutney. This standard treatment, as good as it was, made me long for the adventurousness of chef Jeff Fournier's scallops and bacon created for Newton's Metropolitan Club, where the bacon arrives as a small block rather than in slices.

Morton's didn't call any of its salads "jumbo" or "colossal," but each salad was large enough to serve three people, and substantial enough to satisfy a hungry vegetarian as a main course. We tried two of them: the Morton's salad with blue cheese dressing, chopped egg and anchovies ($9.50); and a Caesar salad ($9.50), crisp romaine lettuce with a classic mustard dressing, crunchy croutons and a dusting of grated Parmesan cheese. Unfortunately, the Morton's salad, made up of green leaf lettuce, arrived wet and cold, as if direct from the refrigerator, with blue cheese so bland as to be almost indistinguishable from the crumbled egg.

But these were merely preliminaries since the main event here, as at any steakhouse, was and is the beef. Morton's "single cut filet" ($35) would be called double-cut in many other restaurants. This butter-tender hunk of prime beef, between 1½ and 2 inches high, didn't require the industrial-size steak knife supplied by our server; it was truly fork-tender. But unlike many filets, it didn't sacrifice full, rich beef flavor for tenderness, and that flavor made the thin, lacquer béarnaise sauce served alongside wholly beside the point. The porterhouse steak ($42) delivered a double delight. With a strip sirloin on one side of the T-bone and a tender filet on the other, the porterhouse, as the waiter described, delivered two steaks for the price of one. The strip loin, at once pleasantly resilient and tender, contrasted with the silky-textured fil

The whole steak had been grilled to Morton's standard of rare: charred on the outside and red within. A trio of domestic double-cut lamb chops ($39), tender rare and juicy inside the well-seared exterior boasted good lamb flavor without the gaminess that turns some people off lamb.

Side orders of vegetables included steamed, fresh jumbo (there's that word again) asparagus ($10.5 six thick spears peeled and poached to a perfect texture: firm to bite, yet tender and full of flavor. The insipid Hollandaise sauce that accompanied them (Morton's should really work on sauces) proved unnecessary. A serving of onnaise potatoes ($6.50) was humongous and would've amply served two. Lyonnaise potatoes are classically made by sautéing slices of parboiled potatoes in butter, layering them with thin slices of sautéed on d then briefly baking them until golden own. Morton's version seemed closer to at we called "hash browns" in my use—browned beyond golden, but deli- us nevertheless.

The décor of Morton's dining room has commercial aspect, since large-format ne bottles (magnums and larger) were ployed and displayed in strategic loca- ns, as if to remind patrons that full-bod- red wines go well with beef and con- bute a not-insignificant therapeutic idote to the cholesterol. Morton's wine , which offers just six reds priced under a bottle, was ameliorated somewhat by sonably priced wines by the glass. The Coastal cabernet sauvignon ($7.95), h decent tannins and good acidity, de a decent companion to the filet, ile the Fetzer Valley Oaks merlot (also 95) seemed flabby and heavy, and had appeared from the menu by our second it. My party also enjoyed a bottle of 04 Solaz ($36), a Spanish cabernet-tem- nillo blend that combined robust yet llow character, pleasant bouquet and a an finish.

Morton's desserts didn't blaze new trails, t the standard offerings had considerable rit. The crème brûlée ($10) came in a ge oblong ramekin with a pleasantly oky caramelized shell and creamy tex- ture underneath. The hot chocolate cake ($12) ranged from slightly dry on the out- side to almost liquid within, all intensely chocolate and very rich. While it satisfied my chocoholic impulse, the generous scoop of vanilla bean ice cream that accompanied it proved more memorable, with its strong, pleasant vanilla flavor.

Our servers' performance reflected their professional training and supervision. True, their singsong, somewhat tedious tutorial at the beginning of each meal, in which they played show-and-tell with almost every menu offering, wore thin. (I wasn't sure I needed to inspect the broccoli.) Otherwise the service was impeccable: pleasant, professional, attentive and effi- cient—too efficient, perhaps, in the alacrity with which waiters sprung to our tableside to top off our wine glasses after a sip or two. They finally backed off when we told them that we weren't going to finish the whole bottle at that sitting, and their ready compliance with the new Massachu- setts law that permits patrons to take home the remainder of a bottle of wine (rather than polish it off before getting behind the wheel) impressed me. Combining civic re- sponsibility with first-rate food and atten- tive service, Morton's makes it easy to see why a loyal clientele considers it the gold standard for steakhouses. IB

From Weston to the West Side Lounge

Suburban chef takes the long route

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

If you're guided by GPS, traveling from the suburb of Weston to the West Side Lounge in Cambridge might take about 20 minutes. But if you're initially led astray into a career in industrial design, it can take a lot longer to reach your destiny as a chef. Just ask Sam Hunt, WSL's new chef, who spent two years at No. 9 Park and most recently did a stint at a local country club—after designing kiosks and displays at trade shows—before settling into the WSL kitchen.

"It's amazing to find your passion," says Hunt, who grew up in Weston. He's already overhauled the menu but retained some signature dishes—such as the fried calamari—because "not all the regulars like change." However, he's brightened up the dish by tossing the calamari with celery and parsley leaves, radish coins and pickled ginger. The current top seller: Thai short ribs braised with lemongrass and ginger, served over a sweet-potato purée enriched with coconut milk and dotted with mint oil.

Bonsoir, Le Soir!

After almost six years as chef/owner of Le Soir in Newton Highlands, Mark Allen says it's time to move on to "something I've always wanted." So he's selling the space to former Metropolitan Club chef Jeffrey Fournier—who'll reopen the space this winter as a modern bistro called Hôtel Lincoln—and making plans to open a new restaurant in Boston.

"I'm close to getting something near the Seaport area," says Allen, "and we'll open up mid-spring." He describes his forthcoming, as-yet-unnamed restaurant as "a chop house... more refined than a steakhouse concept, a lot bigger than what I have now, with a bigger bar." Fans of Le Soir's signature roasted monkfish have no need to fret; the dish will be on the menu at the new place.

Green Street Scene

Long famous for chef Mark Romano's Caribbean-inspired fare—particularly a fiery goat stew—the Green Street Grill in Cambridge has undergone a few changes since Dylan Black purchased the Central Square venue last year. Black reopened the space with a sleek new décor and an abbreviated name (it's now "Green Street," sans "Grill"), but the drastic change didn't occur until September, when Romano departed to explore opening his own restaurant. "We've replaced the plantain with the potato," Black says. "No more goat stew."

Instead, new chef Peter Sultenfuss, most recently sous chef at Eastern Standard, is cooking up Yankee pot roast with buttered noodles and root vegetables, and New England clambakes with Wellfleet clams, mussels, housemade sausage and, of course, potatoes. "We're basing the menu on classic New England dishes," says Black. More changes: a new cocktail list and "better glassware" for wine.

What Would the Gods Drink?

For Thor, may we suggest a Dark and Stormy, and for Persephone, a trendy pomegranate martini? Apparently, the Japanese gods are unanimous in their choice: sake. The folks at Fugakyu in Brookline tell us this 6,000-year-old brew is known as "Drink of the Gods" in its native land. They also tell us that we mortals can enjoy sake flights throughout the month of November: Kira Hojyozo, Kimoto Shinzenshu and Nigori Genshu Momokaw. If those sound too complex, check out shochu cocktails, made from a vodka-like spirit and available in down-to-earth flavors such as Green Apple Passion and Red Devil (made with peach schnapps and cranberry juice). WINE

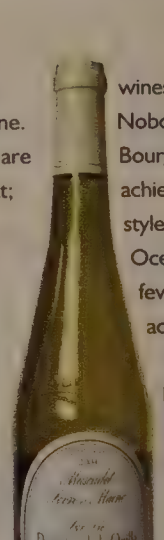
French Wine Revival

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.



This past year has seen a dramatic trend reversal in the world of wine. Imports from France to the U.S. are soaring while those from Australia are flat; just the opposite of what's happened consistently over the last several years. Why are we suddenly drinking more French wines? Nobody knows for sure, but if we finish out the year the way it's started, consumption of French wines will have risen by about 20 percent. Perhaps we've adjusted to the sticker shock of a weak dollar versus the euro. When our currency started to fall in relative value a few years back, there was strong resistance but much of that has evaporated. French wines—which have always been perceived as superpremium and expensive—weren't so fashionable when the economy was shaky, but are now more acceptable after four years of economic recovery. Or perhaps people who're relatively new to wine are branching out from what's familiar, and are drawn to French wines' mystique. Initially we tend to favor wines that are brightly fruity with rich smooth textures. French wines, which are harder to buy because, by and large, they're named after places rather than grape varieties, have flavors that are more of an acquired taste. They also offer a unique experience that can't be duplicated elsewhere, because compared with wines from the U.S., Australia, Chile and New Zealand, most French wines are earthier and more acidic and have a mineral accent. Often they're more understated and subtle in the ripe fruit sensations you'll taste, but also more edgy. Since their true place is with food, French wines often aren't as impressive when compared directly with their counterparts from California or Australia, but they're gaining greater acceptance in restaurants.

What follows is a list of wines from different regions in France that stood out for quality and style in a recent blind tasting. Most are actually moderate in price, although I do include one champagne, because the holidays are coming and for a lot of people, celebrations don't have that same feel without a bottle of the real stuff.

Domaine de la Quilla, Muscadet de Sèvre et Maine Sur Lie, Loire Valley, 2005. $12. This is a real mouthful to say as well as to drink. "Domaine" on a French label means the wine is made and bottled on a single property rather than being blended by a merchant from purchased grapes. This muscadet is very pale in color with a muted apple-like aroma, it's light in body, extremely tangy, with lemon and green apple–flavor accents, and a slightly salty mineral-like spice on the finish. Quintessential with raw shellfish, muscadet is among the most refreshing wines imaginable and it's a true French original. Nobody else grows the grape (Melon de Bourgogne) and nobody else consistently achieves this bracing, sharp-edged bone-dry style. Produced near the shores of the Atlantic Ocean in northern France, this is one of the few French wines of its kind with a maximum acceptable alcohol level of 12.5 percent.

Domaine des Corbillieres Sauvignon Blanc, Touraine, Loire Valley, 2005. $12. Another real bargain from the Loire Valley's fine 2005 vintage, this wine's produced farther inland at Oisily in a warmer part of the Loire. The estate makes clean, crisp sauvignon blanc in a leaner, more stripped-down and drier style than you'll generally find from New Zealand. Not quite as minerally as the sauvignons produced farther east in the villages of Sancerre or Pouilly, this wine has a floral, apple-like, slight citrus note with bright, juicy lemon flavors and a delicate, lingering finish. A bit fuller volume in body, aroma and flavor compared with the muscadet, this is a fine choice for vegetable or fish dishes that feature tart or herbal ingredients.

Kuentz-Bas Riesling "Tradition," Alsace, 2004. $16. This is a lovely wine with a medium deep-yellow color, a blend of leafy, sweet herb, lime and fresh apple fragrances and a bone-dry flavor. The perfect antidote for people who think Riesling's too sweet, it has only trace elements of sweetness. Tart and fresh, with medium-bodied lemony, pure tangy fruit, it's produced by a merchant whose family has a history with Riesling reaching back to the 18th century. Delightful with any smoked or even slightly oily fish preparation: mackerel, bluefish or trout.

Laurent-Perrier "Cuvée Rosé" Brut, NV, Champagne, $75. This wine is a stunner. With an aroma bursting with ripe berries, the wine is medium-full, lush in texture and poignantly tart, with raspberry and herb accents. It's salmon-colored, but don't let that fool you—there's not a discernible trace of sugar. This is one of the few rosé champagnes that's made with 100 percent pinot noir grapes harvested from only grand cru vineyards. The price reflects its noble origins, and not everyone is aware of how delicious and expensive it is to make rosé champagne. For someone special on your holiday list, this would be a "wow" gift. The gorgeous antique-looking bottle doesn't hurt either. Enjoy it with wild salmon or duck breast or as an aperitif. Just don't serve it with a sweet dessert or all of the delicate flavor will be stripped out. IB

Performing Arts: The Disgruntled Dozen

Does Twelve Angry Men refer to the only Bruins fans left in Boston, or is it the stage adaptation of the 1958 Best Picture nominee? Well, both, actually, but for now we'll focus on the latter. The legendary show—which runs for two weeks at the Colonial Theatre—follows the story of 12 jurors trying to reach a verdict for a murder trial that initially appears to be open-and-shut, but gradually transforms into a more complex case. The production, directed by 2005 Tony Award nominee Scott Ellis, features a star-studded cast of players including Richard Thomas and George Wendt, best known from his years on Cheers. Just keep the "Norm!" screams to a minimum while Wendt does his thing on stage. Why make him any angrier? The Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-931-2787). www.broadwayacrossamerica.com. Tue. and Thu., 7:30 pm; Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. $32.50-$77.50. —RL

CityScope: Trick and Treat

Admit it, dog owners: Who doesn't think their pooch possesses camera-ready cuteness that's made for TV? On Oct. 29, you can find out if Fido really does have what it takes. At the second-annual Divas Unleashed Halloween Dog Parade, scouts from The Late Show With David Letterman will be skulking about in search of talented canines. Bring your doggie dressed in Halloween garb for the parade at noon (the $25 entry fee benefits the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals), and you might just get to see your furry friend on national TV. Each dog gets the chance to show off a "stupid pet trick" to the scouts—and, at the very least, goes home with a doggie bag full of treats. Prizes will be awarded to the top three contestants as well. DoggieDay Play Center, 400 Tremont St., Boston. Registration begins at 10 am; parade begins at 12 pm. To register online, go to www.doggieday.com/halloween. —LPK

WED./OCT. 25

Performing Arts: All the Right Moves

If there's one Boston Ballet show to see this season, it's the Oct. 25 Gala Performance. The evening's program promises such a delectable sampling of the dance world's greatest hits that even philistines should get fired up. The roster includes performances by the entire company—featuring all the principal dancers—plus a variety of international guests and a full orchestra. They perform excerpts from pieces both classical and contemporary: music by composers from Bach to Gershwin, and choreography by the celebrated likes of Rudolf Nureyev, George Balanchine and Jerome Robbins. To mark Mikko Nissinen's fifth season as artistic director, 1,800 seats are being sold for just $25 each, but they're going fast. Spring for the $500 ticket and you'll get a prime seat plus an invite to a pre-performance reception at Akris, the ultra chic boutique on Newbury Street. Proceeds from ticket sales benefit the Boston Ballet. The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-695-6955). www.bostonballet.org. 8 pm. $25-$500. —LPK

THU./NOV. 2

Music: Run for Cover

Ever wonder how the vocals on "All of My Love" would sound if Robert Plant could really hit the high notes? How about the guitar solo on "Stairway to Heaven" if Jimmy Page had longer finger nails? Get answers to those questions by heading to the Middle East on Nov. 2 to hear Lez Zeppelin, an all-female Led Zeppelin cover band from New York City that's been rocking to nothing but rave reviews since they formed more than two years ago. Is "Lez" short for lesbian? The band won't say. But any group that pop culture junkie (and Spin magazine editor) Chuck Klosterman calls "the most powerful all-female band in rock history" is a band we're checking out. Middle East, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-931-2000). www.mideastclub.com. 8 pm. $20. —RL

Comedy: A Week of Wisecracks

Eddie Griffin

The last week in October is typically known for spookiness, costume parties and a boatload of candy. But this year in Boston, the week also means kick-ass comedians. The knee slapping starts at the Comedy Connection Oct. 27 as Eddie Griffin, who brought man whoring into the public eye in Deuce Bigalow, Male Gigolo, kicks off the first of two nights of shows. The next night, two major comedy showcases hit the Hub, as the Orpheum hosts the Real Men of Comedy Tour—featuring comics like Joe Rogan and Charlie Murphy—and the Agganis Arena presents the annual Comics Come Home (co-sponsored by the IMPROPER), featuring comedy by Denis Leary, Jim Breuer, Lenny Clarke and others. My Life on the D-List star Kathy Griffin takes the stage Oct. 30 at the North Shore Music Theatre, and the craziness wraps up Nov. 2 as Comedy Central's Carlos Mencia plays two shows at the Orpheum. Yeah, it's a lot to handle in one week; if you're looking for a break from the funny, just let us know, and we'll call you the next time Carrot Top comes to town. See Comedy on page 63 for showtimes and ticket information. —RL

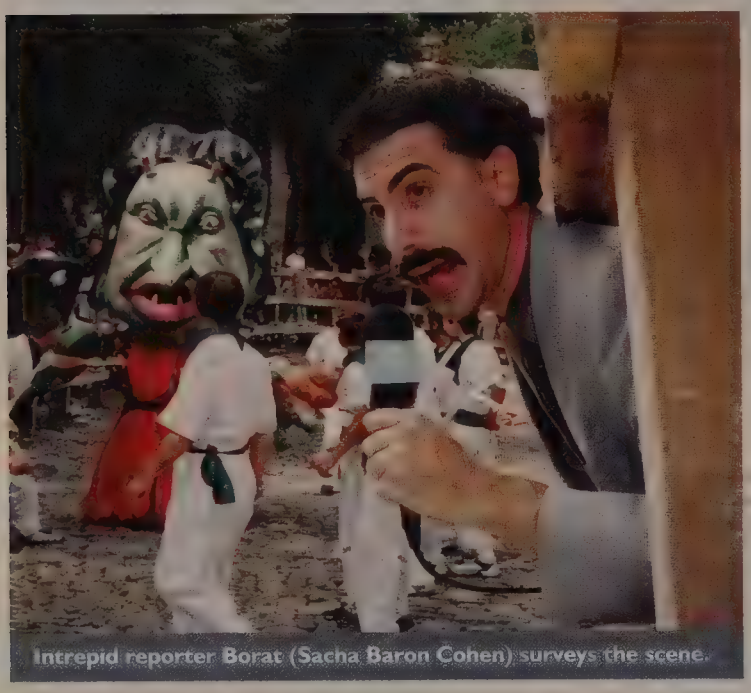
Keeping It Real-ish

Sacha Baron Cohen masterfully blurs the line between performance and reality.

BY SEAN BURNS

Borat Sedegiev is Kazakhstan's sixth-most popular journalist. A tall, gangly fellow in a cheap gray suit, Borat speaks in a mangled whimper, can't stop smiling and peers out at the world with wide, child-like eyes that convey precious little understanding of his surroundings. Borat recently brought his camera crew along on a trip to America, hoping to file reports about our traditions and customs while traveling across this great nation.

There's one problem: The cheerful guy doesn't quite have a handle on civilized behavior just yet. Actually, Borat's something of a monster—unable to sit still for an interview without accidentally letting loose torrents of misogynist scatology, insane homophobic slurs and a particularly virulent strain of anti-Semitism. But thanks to his grinning, slightly addled demeanor, such shocking sentiments emerge so matter of factly you'd think he was talking about the weather.



Intrepid reporter Borat (Sacha Baron Cohen) surveys the scene.

Of course, Borat isn't real. He's a character created by the British gonzo comic genius Sacha Baron Cohen, who has made a hugely successful career out of dumbfounding interview subjects on his Da Ali G Show, where the Borat persona originated. Cohen's M.O.—which he refashions for a stable of similarly deranged guises—is to con unsuspecting guests into thinking they're taking part in a legitimate television program and then blindside them with obscenity and ignorance… just to see what happens next.

Most folks get offended rather quickly, but a frightening number of others feel free to join right in. You'll be shocked and amazed at how much some people will let slip when they think they're talking to a simpleton. The Cambridge University–educated Cohen wrote his thesis on Jewish involvement in the American Civil Rights movement, and his uniquely subversive brand of comedy blows the lid off secret bigotries in order to air them out as rancid stupidity. The most hilarious, and perhaps the most terrifying moment I've ever seen on television occurred during Da Ali G Show, when Borat roused a redneck country-western bar into a fist-pumping sing-along of a catchy little ditty called "Throw the Jew Down the Well."

Now Cohen's invading the multiplexes with Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan, a years-in-the-making, monstrously funny, take-no-prisoners extravaganza that boasts at least half a dozen sequences that must be seen to be believed. Shot guerilla-style, with the usual unassuming victims under the usual false pretenses, Borat's big-screen debut sends our bumbling reporter on the road and lost in America, carrying a briefcase containing a live chicken and searching for his beloved Pamela Anderson, with whom he "would very much like to make a romantic liquid explosion."

As the movie consists of one outrageous surprise after another, it'd be unconscionable for a critic to give away how exactly Borat winds up driving an ice cream truck with a live grizzly bear in the back, or what happens after he converts to evangelical Christianity. Suffice it to say, the movie has a little something to offend just about everybody. There's no piety left untweaked or prejudice left unexposed over the course of 82 riotous minutes, and I dearly look forward to a second viewing, just so I can watch it without constantly having to pick my jaw up off the floor.

What's not so clear in short TV sketches, but becomes astonishing over the long haul of a feature-length movie, is just what a vivid and complete characterization Cohen has developed. He's quite adept at flinging his distended, gangly frame around in all manner of slapstick contortions, but he's even more striking in the quieter, throwaway moments. As the vast majority of the film was improvised on camera, it's astounding to note the unflappable consistency and minute detail of Borat's bizarre physicality, especially when you consider that the actor is also making up all his lines on the spot.

Working from what must've been a mountain of raw footage, director Larry Charles and his crack team of editors have whittled the film down into a breathlessly paced locomotive. They cut in and out of scenes so fast, the audience never has time to stop laughing, while the staged scenes furthering the picture's ever-so-slight storyline blend unobtrusively into the documentary set-pieces.

No stranger to anarchic comedy, longtime TV-vet Charles made his reputation as a writer on Seinfeld and helmed several episodes of Larry David's Curb Your Enthusiasm. His first feature-directing gig was the unjustly maligned, widely misunderstood Masked and Anonymous—a dark, postapocalyptic farce that he cowrote with Bob Dylan, both of them working under silly pseudonyms. Charles took over Borat after the original director, Todd Phillips, quit, and one look at Phillips' recent, gawdawful School for Scoundrels will make you grateful they found the right man for this job.

According to the newspapers, of course, Kazakhstan's government sees things a bit differently. Leading up to this film's release were all sorts of threatened lawsuits and public rumblings so unintentionally amusing it's hard not to wonder if they all might not be some Andy Kaufman–esque stunt engineered by Cohen. Whatever the case, Borat's unsuspecting onscreen counterparts blurt out so many shockers, even the most easily offended Kazakh official should be able to tell that the real joke here is on America. iB

explain why watching this pleasingly deriv

ast Guard training camp saga feels a bit like sink- into a cozy old chair. Cribbed shamelessly from) Gun and An Officer and a Gentleman, The ardian stars Kevin Costner as a past-his-prime res- swimmer making the awkward transition to drill tructor for a group of cocky, fresh-faced recruits. loid perennial Ashton Kutcher plays his promis- -but-too-reckless hotshot pupil. Yes, it's the tradi- ıal Tom Cruise role—and any personal distaste might have these days for Mr. Scientology Crazy- ıts will promptly vanish upon witnessing Kutcher's ıbering, charmless maverick. (Seriously, can this even be bothered to give a performance?) After a -immolating flirtation with superstardom, Costner ms to be settling down into character parts these s, and his dry wit and fussy charm come into play te nicely here. Helmed with a journeyman's sense craft by Fugitive director Andrew Davis, it's a dy, unobjectionable time waster that will probably y even better during its inevitable Sunday after- ɔn repeats on TNT. (At Boston Common, Fenway l in the suburbs.)

idiot's delight. There are few things more subjec- e than comedy, particularly when the humor in- ves young men of questionable intellectual apti- e finding new and inventive ways to bash their ds against concrete and cause grievous bodily harm ne another's bathing suit areas. Johnny Knoxville l his gang of cackling morons are back for even re death-defying flights of foolishness, episodes of ming public nudity, and borderline-criminal mis- of both their own bodily orifices and the resultant te products. There's no point in trying to convince tain members of the intelligentsia that this sort of iness represents anything less than a death knell for stern culture, but it should nonetheless be noted t this sequel is wilder, better-paced and even more erfully outré than the original. (I laughed, I icked, I almost vomited.) Gross-out movie guru n Waters makes a brief appearance, as if giving his ssing to the onscreen doody-eating tradition he an in 1972 with Pink Flamingos, and a go-for-broke sical number borrowed from La Cage aux Folles is igned to wreak some subversive havoc on the ho- phobia of the film's frat boy audience. (At Boston mmon, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Last King of Scotland ★★½

The great character actor Forest Whitaker delivers a chilling, towering performance as bloodthirsty Ugandan dictator Idi Amin in this fictionalized chronicle of the madman's rise and fall. Funny one moment, terrifying the next, Whitaker delivers such a bravura, barnstorming turn it's downright perplexing that the filmmakers choose to keep him on the sidelines for so much of the picture. Adapted from a novel by Giles Folden, the film devotes an inexplicable amount of attention to James McAvoy, here playing a callow Scottish doctor who's seduced by Amin's charm, power and riches. He becomes the self-appointed "president for life's" personal physician, and doesn't seem to notice until too late that dissenters have a suspicious way of disappearing. McAvoy is a spindly, unappealing presence who can't hold the screen alongside of Whitaker's boisterous scenery-chewing. Much in the way Richard Attenborough's unfortunate Cry Freedom relegated South African hero Steve Biko's struggle to a problem for Kevin Kline's journalist, The Last King of Scotland leaves you with the uneasy feeling that 300,000 Ugandans were slaughtered just so this uppity white kid could learn a few life lessons. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Last Kiss ★★

The worst date movie since The Break-Up, The Last Kiss finds Garden State's Zach Braff once again appointing himself spokesman for a generation, straining to represent the commitment-phobia of angsty early-30-somethings everywhere. As a successful young architect panicked by his girlfriend's pregnancy, Braff has a caddish minor breakdown, gallivanting around with a too-willing college student (The O.C.'s Rachel Bilson) while setting off a domino effect of relationship crises amongst friends and family. A doggedly loyal Xerox of an Italian film by Gabrielle Muccino that played here in Boston barely four years ago, both versions of The Last Kiss are (like all movies about guys at this point in their lives) essentially modern riffs on Federico Fellini's great I, Vitelloni. Unfortunately, screenwriter Paul Haggis prefers generalities to specifics. As in his inexplicably beloved Crash, every character in this adaptation takes their turn summing up the thesis of the movie in tidy, bite-size speeches. More admirable for what it's attempting to do than what it actually pulls off, The Last Kiss is just a little too orderly and subdued for its own good. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Little Children ★★★½

Kate Winslet gives a performance of astonishing fearlessness and grace in this poignant adaptation of Belmont-based author Tom Perrotta's barbed novel of suburban malaise. Mapping out a moneyed neighborhood's playground rituals with an Edith Wharton–esque attention to propriety amongst proud parents, Little Children chronicles an unlikely erotic connection between Winslet's bumbling, frumpy, desperately unhappy housewife and Patrick Wilson's handsome, henpecked stay-at-home dad. Director Todd Field (who cowrote the screenplay with Perotta himself) was mentored by the late Stanley Kubrick, and here he emulates the master's stylized, hermetically chilly, eye-of-God perspective—complete with a sardonic, third-person narration straight out of Barry Lyndon. But every time the picture begins to feel a bit too pleased with itself, these actors find a moment of truth so stark and uncomfortable, you'll be grateful for the camera's respectful distance. Former Bad News Bear Jackie Earle Haley brings both terror and pathos to the role of a sex offender paroled into a town full of raging security moms and emasculated dads, searching for a scapegoat. This overambitious movie sometimes gets a bit too big for its britches, but Winslet bravely plumbs the depths of selfishness and sadness. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Man of the Year ★★

It sounds like a foolproof premise: Robin Williams stars as the host of a popular late-night political comedy show (any resemblance to Jon Stewart or Bill Maher is entirely intentional) who's drafted in a grassroots movement to run as a third-party candidate for President of the United States. Much to the surprise and delight of his gag-writing entourage (which includes a lively Christopher Walken and the loud-mouthed Daily Show correspondent Lewis Black), the blunt, trash-talking comic improbably wins the election. It's a scenario ripe for satire, but writer-director Barry Levinson has surprisingly little on his mind when it comes time to skewer the eroding line between politics and entertainment. Man of the Year almost immediately devolves into a half-baked thriller, costarring Laura Linney as a whistle-blower on the run. Nefarious computer executives behind the nation's faulty electronic voting machines are trying to snuff her out, and any chance for topical observation takes a backseat to uninspired chase sequences. Williams obviously improvised the majority of his stump speeches, and he here hits about 50/50—as usual, more impressive for his speed than his accuracy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Old Joy ★★★
A tiny, quiet film that packs a surprising emotional wallop, Kelly Reichardt's sophomore effort gains power long after the closing credits have rolled. Based on a short story by Jonathan Raymond (who cowrote the screenplay with Reichardt), the film follows two estranged friends, pushing middle age and reuniting for a camping trip in the Oregon woods. Mark (Daniel London) drives a Volvo and is expecting his first child. But Kurt (singer Will Oldham) remains the unrepentant hippie that he was in his youth, still smoking pot and drifting from place to place. It's a film of uncomfortable pauses and half-finished conversations, as these two struggle mightily to reconnect amid the deafening quietness of the wilderness. At only 76 minutes, the picture still feels a mite too long—boasting a few too many long shots of the forest backed by Yo La Tengo's soundtrack music. But though it's a sometimes restless sit, Old Joy evokes a very palpable despair during those long gaps of inaction, silences expressing the heartbreak of friends who can't seem to recognize one another anymore. (At Kendall Square.)

Running With Scissors ★
This garish, tone deaf, altogether excruciating adaptation of Augusten Burroughs' best-selling memoir is a smarmy avalanche of grotesquerie. Writer-director Ryan Murphy takes Burroughs' harrowing childhood saga and infuses it with the same smirky, outré self-satisfaction that mars his TV series, Nip/Tuck. The vacuous Joseph Cross stars as the young Burroughs, who after struggling with his mentally ill mother (Annette Bening, overacting to the rafters) is adopted by her even crazier shrink (Brian Cox, trying in vain to downplay some of the most bizarre lines he's ever been given.) The result is something like a carnival freak show, as every dysfunctional family member tries to out-do one another in parade of can-you-top-this set pieces. Gwyneth Paltrow talks to God and tortures cats, while Joseph Fiennes hears voices and deflowers our protagonist. Jill Clayburgh eats dog kibble, as Cox gets stuck inviting everyone to help examine his morning bowel movements. What's missing from all this madness is even the slightest glimmer of humanity, any faint emotional connection that could possibly justify being trapped for two hours with a bunch of famous people pretending that they're nuts. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Shortbus ★★★★
Although already notorious on the festival circuit for its no-holds-barred approach to onscreen sex scenes (and yes, they are indeed as graphic and unsimulated as anything you'll see in any porn flick), writer-director John Cameron Mitchell's warm, wondrous Shortbus is hardly a scummy object of titillation for the raincoat crowd. It's instead a funny, randy, absolutely delightful romantic comedy set in a New York City still staggering under the long shadow of 9/11. Sook-Yin Lee leads a cast of brave, boldly exposed newcomers, each sorting through messy relationship entanglements and converging on the afterhours club from which the movie takes its title. Gay, straight, fat, skinny, old, young, ugly and beautiful—all are welcome, and all are embraced by the movie's boundless generosity and compassion. It's no accident that the picture begins with a close-up on the Statue of Liberty, as Mitchell positions sexual freedom and exploration as our inalienable rights. (There's a rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" that must be seen to be believed.) More revolutionary than the boundary-pushing hardcore content is Shortbus' joyful exuberance and empathy. The biggest organ on display here is the movie's heart. (At Kendall Square.)

The U.S. vs. John Lennon ★★
More like "The Gospel According to Yoko Ono." This infuriatingly incomplete, rose-tinted documentary purports to expose the Nixon administration's pernicious harassment campaign against the former Beatle. But it's really just another layer of polish for the official version of the Lennon myth, burnished every few years by Ono and associates, to boost record sales and further canonize Saint John as the only public figure of note in the entirety of the 1960s. The film's selective memory dubiously posits "Revolution" as the first pop protest song, willfully ignoring the dozens of other artists who were taking their own stands long before Lennon. You also won't hear the words "Paul McCartney" or "George Harrison" mentioned once in this entire movie, and you'd have to be crazy to think they'd bring up the v and child John abandoned to run off with Yoko. rectors David Leaf and John Scheinfeld fashion collage of fun archival footage and terrific songs a VH-1 friendly format, but their blinkered cho blow Lennon's prankish, heartfelt antiwar pro all out of proportion, doing a disservice to othe the movement. John Lennon was far too captiva and contradictory a figure to deserve such a sim minded hagiography. (At Harvard Square.)

Stepping "Out"

John Scofield and MMW reunite to challenge expectations.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

When jazz guitarist John Scofield enlisted the trio Medeski Martin & Wood to back him on 1998's A Go Go, little did he know their groove-savvy summit would become a landmark, broadening the musical horizons of a jamband audience.

"You never know with any recording," Scofield says. "It was a pivotal time." Younger fans began to show up at his jazz gigs, and the guitarist kept mingling on the jam circuit (even playing Bonnaroo with Grateful Dead alum Phil Lesh).

"It reminded me of the hippie scene in the '60s, when these groups were playing the Fillmore, and it would be Santana, Miles [Davis] and [Jimi] Hendrix, that kind of diverse music," Scofield says, crediting his crossover to first hearing keyboardist John Medeski, drummer Billy Martin and bassist Chris Wood.

"You try to find the grooves—that's what it's all about, and MMW is into all the same grooves that I am," Scofield says from his Connecticut home. "They have a funk, New Orleans–type vibe that hardly anybody else does, combined with free jazz and real soul. And they're keyboard-bass-drums. What better group for a guitarist to play with?"

However, the group only managed to play one European show with all four musicians in place to support A Go Go. Eight years later, that's finally about to change. The now-named Medeski Scofield Martin & Wood will swing into the Calvin Theatre in Northampton Nov. 12, Lupo's in Providence Nov. 15, and the Berklee Performance Center Nov. 16 (Berklee being Scofield's alma mater) on its first national tour. The group just released a stellar second CD, Out Louder, which delves into more eclectic, adventurous interplay.

"A Go Go was my project and this time it's a four-way collaboration," Scofield says. And from his upstate New York home, Medeski adds, "There's no point in making the same record. That's not our style in general, any of us."

In the years since A Go Go, Scofield says, "I've played with these guys [separately] on a bunch of gigs, more into their world of pretty free playing, and we wanted to document some of that."

The quartet convened to record in Shacklyn, MMW's Brooklyn rehearsal complex, which lent "a dirty, rat-filled basement vibe," Medeski says. "There's a certain free-spirited thing that happens in that space, sort of a dark energy."

The first thing the band recorded was "Down the Tube," an 11-minute funk freefall that remains Scofield's favorite track on the CD. "That tune is totally improvised," the guitarist says. "That's what MMW can do that's so great, and I just wanted to get in there and do that with them."

But for the majority of the tracks, the group listened to initial improvisations, then rearranged and rerecorded. "We wanted a little more structure than the jam offered, while trying to keep the spirit of the original," Medeski says.

In addition to spirit, Shacklyn offered MMW's eclectic collection of instruments, with Medeski branching beyond his organ, piano and clavinet to color the disc with the eerie, otherworldly sounds of Mellotron as well as other keyboards. Scofield also tapped a wider palette than he did on A Go Go, utilizing electronic loops and other effects.

"There were times in the longer improvisations when we couldn't tell who was doing what," says Medeski, adding that he also appreciates the chance to hear Scofield rip through the jazz-rock freakout "Miles Behind" (a nod to Scofield's early-'80s employer Miles Davis) and "What Now," a fast-tempo blues that Martin wouldn't normally play.

"That's what's cool about the record—stretching out in different realms that we don't always get to hear," says Medeski, a former Bostonian who was just in town to play with the experimental local collective Club d'Elf, having appeared on its new studio release, Now I Understand.

Winding down Out Louder are a solemn "Julia" and a slinky twist on the reggae classic "Legalize It," covers that temper and balance the extremes on MSMW's second outing and ensure that listeners find something up their alley.

Now the quartet will take their sound on tour, reshaping tunes from Out Louder ("They will evolve and morph every night," says Scofield) as well as A Go Go favorites and some new stuff.

"We're all sort of fearful, in all honesty, of the whole jamband thing, the negative side of that," Medeski says. "We feel we need to do something to prove ourselves.

"I have friends who were very skeptical about us doing another record with Scofield. After hearing the record, they all said 'Wow, I admit you have a real connection.'" IB Medeski Scofield Martin & Wood play Nov. 16 at the Berklee Performance Center.

rockie horoscope

SCORPIO OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Like Libra, you should probably read the entire column. So much is going on in Scorpio in a variety of areas. (You could be in the process of expanding your business as Jupiter would have you do). Perhaps you're thinking about getting "busy" with a new love interest, because until the end of the month, romantic Venus will be climbing all over your Mars co-ruler. Mercury retrograde from Oct. 28 to Nov. 17 suggests that you should be preparing for that as well. Then there's another birthday that needs to be celebrated.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Centaurs who depend on their communication skills—via media outlets, the classroom or offering advice, solicited or otherwise—will have a field day once they appreciate how wide their base has broadened, now that their expansive Jupiter ruler merged with Mercury on Oct. 21. This realization is important, because in just one more month Jupiter will become embedded in Sagittarius for a year. Come December, after another crucial consultation with the Messenger, what arose from their initial meeting should be confirmed.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

The recent lunar phenomena that may have disoriented your Cancer complement can affect you this month, too. That's because the Libra new moon on Oct. 21 took place in your career zone and inaugurated a new cycle of pleasing your boss or placating a client. Since Caps are usually so goal-oriented anyway, it'll pay to carefully track what develops during the next few days with anyone who has some authority over you. This week also marks the last challenging square between pie-in-the-sky Jupiter and your conservative Saturn ruler.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Exotic and mysterious is what could command your attention this week. Leafing through National Geographic again? The current pile-up of planets in Scorpio can heighten a desire to explore the unknown. For many Aquarians, it might be reading up on the psychology of something they're fascinated by; for others, it could be hiking unfamiliar terrain. And some will be determined to find a way to widen the career path they've already forged for themselves. If you need better credentials, now's the time to get them.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Fish can't help but benefit from the four planets plus the sun in Scorpio—the water sign that's more often than not the most compatible with Pisces. Because passionate Mars and embraceable Venus are currently hooked up in that sexy sign, your romantic forecast looks not merely rosy but red-hot. Mid-March Fish could advance through the hallowed halls of academia faster than expected, thanks to the combined intelligence of prophetic Jupiter and informative Mercury. While Mercury is retrograde, double-check your facts.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

You're strong, you're invincible, and right now you're quite desirable. By joining forces with the Libra sun, your Mars ruler could have provided more power than you know what to do with. Even highly trained athletes will be amazed at what they're able to accomplish this week. But it's the weeklong merger of Mars with magnetic Venus in sexy Scorpio (starting Oct. 24) that'll raise your level of "hot!" Venus gets together with Mars every year. When their hookup happens in passionate Scorpio, it's a special treat. Enjoy.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Read for Aries. While you might not have the physical stamina afforded to Rams this week, Bulls will certainly have as much sex appeal. And because Mars' meeting with your Venus ruler takes place in Scorpio, the sign of your cosmic mate, you could make a more permanent connection—perhaps even with a gad-about Ram. By all means, hit every one of those Halloween events dressed to the nines so that you can be ready for the allure you'll radiate when the Scorpio sun illuminates Venus on Oct. 27.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

The Libra new moon on Oct. 21 took place in your house of romance and risk. If ever you were urged by the cosmos to take a chance, this week would be it. While your Mercury ruler is about to turn retrograde (giving you some time to mull over your decision), its first meeting with far-sighted Jupiter on Oct. 21-22 should improve your ability to envisio what lies ahead. Two more encounters with the jolly giant planet before the holiday party season sets in, and whatever you finally decided will be a fait accompli.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

It's confusing. Two new moons in a row taking place in the la degree of their signs could have sent any Moon Child a mixed message. In September, you barely had enough time to absorb the Virgo new moon vibe and the sense that a new cycle was about to start when the sun went into Libra. The same holds true this month with the Libra new moon on Oct. 21 and the sun's switch into Scorpio on Oct. 23, an entirely different operational system. Let's hope you get used to it; for the rest of the year, that's how those balls in the sky will bounce.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

It works both ways. The advantage Aries and Taurus native receive when their ruling planets are bolstered by a meetin with your sun ruler is returned in kind. You'll have more physical prowess and a greater willingness to take a chanc because the sun and ballsy Mars connected last weekend. And you can anticipate a lot more loving when the sun merges with affectionate Venus this weekend. That all this action takes place in and around your neighborhood is reason enough to spruce up the house. Decorate it for Halloween. Buy new sheets.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

The discriminating Virgin could get quite lucky when the creative sun, impulsive Mars and value-conscious Venus ge together in your second house of money earned and object acquired. The lucky part is that this sequence of astrologi events takes place before your Mercury ruler turns retrograde on Oct. 28, so you'll have a few days to make that fabulous purchase or return it if it doesn't meet your pristine standards. With Mars and Venus together in sexy Scorpio for the first time since December 2004, imagine th fun you can have this Halloween.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Read for Aries, Taurus and Leo. What the hell, read all I No one can ever be certain how a memorable meeting between your loving Venus ruler and horny Mars will tur out, but the above forecasts could provide a clue. Then, when the sun catches up with the goddess and engulfs h with its beneficial rays on Oct. 27, you may be inspired create something beautiful that'll last longer than the d At the very least, you might feel a lot happier and a lot luckier than you usually are. By the by, Mercury flips in your Scorpio money house on Oct. 28—buy what you must before then.

Scamming Kills

To "Big Al": If you're an executive chef at a popular restaurant like you claim, perhaps you need to ask your employer for a raise so that you can afford a couple of drinks on your own dime. Soliciting a cocktail from a total stranger is nothing unusual. However, offering to make your way to the bar for a second (with my $20 bill), and then disappearing, really shows you to be a total loser. By the way, at 6' and 295 pounds, you really do have a gut—you fat bastard!

Disco Duds

s a frequent clubber, I'm continually urprised at the conduct of men at hese places. There are the Wall-owers—those who pay the cover to tand on the sidelines all night and ratch everyone dance; the Movers-nd-Shakers, who resemble ontestants on So You Think You Can Dance?; the Wallets, as my friends nd I call them—the men who wait y the bar and get a thrill from the rief encounter of paying for a girl's rink. And then there's my avorite—the Leeches, who attack ou from behind just when your avorite song comes on and you're bviously dancing with your irlfriends. They don't ask you to ance, nor do they show you their ice. They grope you like they've nown you for years and when your iends finally pull you to safety, and ou turn to see who attached them-elves to you, they're gone. Word to ie wise: If you fit into one of these ategories, save your money and stay ome. On the other hand, if you're ie type of guy who defies the above ategories, come ask me to dance.

Goo-Goo, Ga-Ga

To my dearest little monkey: First, I just want to tell you how awesome you are. Now that that's out of the way, I love you more than I could ever love anyone and I'll love you forever. I know that a lot of people don't expect us to last forever since we're so young (18 and 19), but you and I know differently. I'm so lucky to have found you so early. Not only did it save me from dating assholes, but I get to be blissfully, perfectly happy for a longer time. Yay! I love that around you I don't care how stupid I act because I know your stupidity matches mine easily. I love that you comfort me during my anxious middle-of-the-night phone calls. I'm touched that you take me to my arthritis treatments and make sure that I don't walk into poles afterwards. I love when you sing to me, and I love your long, dark hair (although a teeny tiny trim wouldn't hurt). I love a lot more stuff about you that would take up too much space in the IMPROPER.

—Your Honey-Baby

Sweet Ride

If you've lived in the city for any amount of time and have taken a taxi, you're well aware of the stench that comes along with the service. How many times have you considered bailing out of a cab upon catching a whiff of the putrid smell inside? Last weekend I hailed a cab downtown and was pleasantly surprised when the smell of peach and vanilla freshness teased my nose. I had to question the company I was with to see if it was the martinis I'd previously drank—or did this taxi actually smell wonderful? The cab driver wouldn't reveal his sweet-smelling secrets until the very end of the ride, when he pulled a fruit-scented air spray from his glove compartment. Thanks, cabbie, for a rare, sweet ride home!

—Driving Miss Hazy

Cold Comfort

As a fan of iced coffee, even when the temperatures outside start to resemble that of my drink, I'm often forced into getting a hot beverage for the sake of my hands. I'd like to suggest to all year-round coffee sellers that they give their customers either a hot beverage cup to put their iced drink in (like Dunkin' Donuts has started doing), or a paper sleeve (typically used for hot drinks) to place on the iced drink. If I were ensured that my hands wouldn't turn numb after walking with my iced coffee, I would definitely purchase this beverage through the winter. Just think of how much more money Starbucks would make if they designed a way to save their customers from frostbite when ordering a $4 frappuccino in December. Please, help keep us iced coffee drinkers warm!

—Oh So Chilly

Walk This Way

Travelling in the city is difficult enough with the one-way streets and heavy traffic, but it seems to me that pedestrians are bringing drivers more road rage than anything else. I can't even count how many times I've had to slam on my brakes after a person walks in front of my car. People are constantly crossing when they don't have the walk sign. If cars can't drive when they have a red light, why should pedestrians walk when they have the caution hand? There's an injustice on the streets of Boston, and many accidents waiting to happen. Start obeying the lights, or prepare to take a ride (in an ambulance) to Mass. General, if you're not careful.

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Gallilee Raposa and Cara Mezzetti brought us to Mosul, Iraq, where the IMPROPER was implemented as the centerpiece in a future Iraqi democracy.

Svetlana, Veronika and Antonina Piddubna, and Ruslan Lucero (Sox hat) journeyed to Sudak, Ukraine, where the numbers puzzle Sudako is all the rage.

Michael Romano visited the beaches of Cala Fonte in Italy. In the background you can see the island of Palmarola, which is known for its palm trees. Funny, we always assumed it was known for its arolas.

Ryan, Kelly Ann and Brandon Boey brought us to the shores of Penang, Malaysia. They only brought two issues, but Kelly Ann seems in no way ready to admit that.

Alexandra Sweeney (with magazine) worked a week at the Lacondemine Vineyard in Beaujeu, France. She spent the next week trying to erase the image of the shirtless guy in the "jorts" (jean shorts) from her memory.

RESTAURANTS

AMRHEINS 80 West Broadway, South Boston, MA, 617-268-6189. www.amrheinsboston.com. Amrheins has been a Boston tradition since 1890 and is home to the oldest hand-carved bar in America. Offering classic New England cuisine with a distinctly modern twist, Amrheins is the winner of "Boston's Best" Steak tips. Come watch the game on our High Definition plasma TVs! Open daily for lunch and dinner. Amrheins famous Sunday Brunch has been a perennial favorite of Bostonians everywhere. Sundays 10:00am–2:00pm. Our private function space is perfect for your corporate or holiday parties.

BONFIRE 64 Arlington St., Boston Park Plaza Hotel, Theatre District, 617-262-3473. Chef Todd English's restaurant, Bonfire, is a steak house and tequila bar with a wood-fired grill and Latin and European influences. The décor is gorgeous in warm red and gold tones. An extensive taco menu, wood-grilled steaks and a late-night tapas menu provide options for all diners. Open nightly for dinner and late-night dining.

CACTUS CLUB 939 Boylston St., 617-236-0200. Have the notorious Cactus margarita, voted Boston's Best 6 years in a row! Our southwestern specialties include Sizlin' Fajitas, Chimichangas, or Quesadillas and the daring wash it all down with a Cactus Bowl. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Visit our suburban Iguana Cantina restaurant in Waltham. Amex, Visa and Diners Club. www.bestmargaritas.com.

COOGAN'S 171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415. www.irishconnection. com. Established in 1996, Coogan's is a cozy pub located in the heart of Boston's financial district. It's the perfect place to enjoy hearty pasta dishes, fresh seafood or the aged Black Angus cuts of beef. Wash it down with your pick of one of our 20 draught beers. Enjoy the view of the street side from the bay windows, the warmth of the fireplace or cozy up in a booth with friends. After dark, Coogan's heats up, with DJ's playing top 40.

FUGAKYU 1280 Beacon Street (Coolidge Corner), Brookline, MA 02446, 617-734-1268. www.fugakyu. net. Authentic Japanese cuisine in an elegant and serene setting. Open Daily for lunch and dinner, Fugakyu's menu consists of traditional and nouveau Japanese cuisine including sushi, sashimi, tempura and an extensive sake list. Fugakyu is the largest Japanese restaurant in New England. It's two floors include a sushi bar, cocktail bar, common dining areas, bamboo-enclosed booths, screened Tatami rooms and several private function rooms. Reservations for parties of all sizes are accepted. Takeout and delivery available.

IGUANA CANTINA 313 Moody St., Waltham, 781-891-3039; The Iguana Cantina serves a variety of Caribbean, Tex-Mex and Southwestern fare. The atmosphere is fun and the food is tasty. Visit our website at www.theiguanacantina.com.

MATCH 94 Massachusetts Ave., at Newbury Street, Boston, 617-247-9922. This modern restaurant/lounge maintains an unpretentious yet hip vibe. A sleek fire display and glass wine room are just two of its many features. Match's signature mini burgers and martinis are guaranteed to please the most discriminating palate. Match music has a distinct early evening lounge feel with the beat and volume picking up as the night progresses. Open daily 5pm-1am. AE, DC, MC,V.

M.J. O'CONNOR'S 27 Columbus Ave., at Park Plaza, Boston 617-482-2255 www.mjocconors.com. Eclectic Irish Food and spirits, a warm friendly staff and beautifully handcrafted woodwork and murals make this authentic upscale Irish pub one of Boston's best. Starting with only the finest ingredients, each dish is slow cooked according to recipes that have been used for generations. If you're looking for a respite from the hustle and bustle of the city, M.J. O'Connor's is a comfortable and welcoming environment to enjoy a delicious meal, have a pint and some great conversation. Open 11am - 2am 7 days a week.

NED DEVINE'S Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Quincy Market Building, Boston 617-248-8800 www.neddevineboston. com. Located in historic Faneuil Hall Marketplace's Quincy Market Building, Ned Devine's is an upscale Irish Pub concept which features hearty Irish specialties and contemporary American cuisine. Whether it's an afternoon business meeting, dinner with family or after work social gathering, Ned's is a warm meeting spot to enjoy conversation and a wonderful meal. Hand painted murals, imported Irish woodwork, original brickwork and ambient lighting create a comfortable atmosphere in the heart of downtown Boston. Open 11am - 2am, 7 days a week.

SIDNEY'S GRILLE 20 Sidney St., Cambridge, 617-494-0011 Enjoy fresh flavors, good friends, and a great bar at Sidney's Grille in Central Square. Discover why Bon Appétit magazine says "It's almost shocking to pay this little for food this good, in surroundings this gorgeous." Memorable cuisine combines international flair with regional accents. Serving breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend brunch. Private dining available. For menus www.sidneysgrille.com.

SMITH & WOLLENSKY The Castle at Columbus & Arlington, 617-423-1112. www.smithandwollensky.com. Lunch M-F. Dinner nightly. USDA Prime steaks, dry aged and butchered on premises are featured at this quintessential steakhouse where Chef Tindaro Losurdo creates outstanding fare. The menu offers variety beyond steak with spectacular seafood bouquets, lobsters, outstanding sides, as well as homemade desserts. Set in a treasured landmark known to Bostonians as "the Castle;" the meticulously restored space has seven working fireplaces and dining rooms that span four floors to blend fun and formality.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP:130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331; SUNSET CANTINA: 916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646. Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 am.

THE BLACK ROSE 160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnection.com. Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

THE LIVING ROOM 101 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, MA. 617-723-5101. www.thelivingroomboston.com. Cool, comfortable, casual–the name says it all. Where else can you enjoy American comfort food while relaxing on a couch or at a table, and even have dessert first? This restaurant, bar & lounge succeeds at being homey rather than haughty. There's an inventive martini list and friendly staff, just moments from Quincy Market and the North End. Try the Living Room's awesome apps like Chicken Taquitos, Mini-Burgers or Shrimp & Avocado Egg Rolls. Full dinner menu is served from 4:30 PM until Midnight daily. Saturday and Sunday a "Pajama Brunch" is served from 11:00 AM to 3:00 PM. Bar & Lounge open until 1:00 AM daily.

WHO KNEW THEY GAVE OUT DEGREES IN THAT?

What do you get a 30-year-old who has everything? How about a birthday blow-out at the Wang Center, complete with a cocktail hour and seated dinner, a concert with top-flight talent, and a raucous afterparty?

That's how the Boston Lyric Opera marked its pearl anniversary, with a guest list as impressive as the opulent festivities.

Present and accounted for: the evening's honorees, über–arts patrons Hod and Cassandra Irvine, the Akins (party chairs Jane and Kyla and BLO board chair Steve), Wang board head Bill Poduska with dazzling Susan and their opera-singer daughter, Heather, Wang CEO Josiah Spaulding Jr. and the flawless Joyce, blue-blooded do-gooder Jeffrey Marshall, raven-haired fashion plate Jane Roy, megaphilanthropists Roger and Norma Saunders and Cokie and Lee Perry, board member Peter Wender, the unfailingly generous Wendy Shattuck and Sam Plimpton, 28 Degrees proprietor Bill Emery, real estate mack daddy Tony Pangaro, iconoclastic arts booster Linda Cabot Black, fashion designer Paula Jaq'lyn and her other half, George Brown, Channel 2 supercutie Jared Bowen, the New England Conservatory's Janet Goff (aka Princess Zsanay), and so on and so forth, all of whom were left breathless by the magnificent recital of famous arias featuring soprano Lisa Daltirus, mezzo-soprano Kate Lindsey, tenor Michael Hayes, baritone Earle Patriarco, bass Morris Robinson and maestro Willie Anthony Waters.

Booties shook wildly and champagne flowed freely at the afterparty, where one young lady was overheard saying, "After four years at Emerson, if you're not either gay or a chain smoker, you get your money back."

RAWHIDE...

In case you were wondering, all those life-size fiberglass cows decorated by local artists that dotted downtown all summer didn't get sent to the slaughterhouse.

Instead, they were auctioned off at the Boston Marriott Copley Place to benefit the Jimmy Fund. The evening began with a cocktail reception/preview, followed by the main event in the ballroom, where art appreciation met animal husbandry in a one-of-a-kind livestock auction that your average rancher from Nebraska would've found surpassingly strange. As one guest put it, after the gavel had fallen: "Who spends $13,000 on a fiberglass cow?"

As it turned out, however, 13K was mere cattle feed; the highlight of the evening came when philanthropic couple George and Patsy Conrades bid $50,000 for "Make Way for Calflings" (a mama cow leading her calves) by Gwendolyn Holbron.

Blushing at all the attention, George Conrades pointed out, "I didn't pay $50,000 for one cow. I paid $50,000 for nine cows." (Which, for all we know, could constitute a bargain in Omaha.)

Be that as it may, one attendee was overheard saying, "For that much money, I'd expect champagne to come from the udders and for it to shit solid gold cow patties."

Pop quiz:

From Fenway to the Runway is...

A) The sequel to Fever Pitch, in which Jimmy Fallon leaves Drew Barrymore for Giselle Bündchen.

B) Josh Beckett's as-yet-unwritten autobiography chronicling his decision to abandon major league baseball for a career in modeling.

Or

C) The annual luncheon and fashion show hosted by the Red Sox Wives to benefit the Women's Cancers Program at Dana-Farber and the Red Sox Charitable Foundation.

If you answered C, give yourself a pat on the back, and if you actually attended, give yourself two, since the elegant afternoon raised big bucks for two worthy causes, in addition to being perfectly lovely.

Seen at Excelsior, which hosted the event along with such ultraluxe shops from Heritage on the Garden as Anne Fontaine, Escada, Jacadi, St. John, Marina Rinaldi and Sonia Rykiel, were owners' wives Peggy Henry and Stacey Lucchino, cohosts Mimi Maich and Cecelia Rapaport, floral goddess Simone Winston, the adorable Lynne Smith, brunette bombshell Randi Cutler, the incomparable Cyndi Humphrey, the comme il faut Debbie First, and such spouses of the hometown team as Juliana Ramirez, Tiffany Ortiz, Shonda Schilling, Kathryn Nixon and Dawn Timlin. NESN's Hazel Mae, meanwhile, acted as emcee, while one of the few men in the room was Jonathan Papelbon, there to cheer on wife Ashley.

The food was delicious and the live auction of fantasy items provided excellent entertainment, as did amusing comments, like when Shonda Schilling responded to compliments on the outfit she was modeling by saying, "I feel like I'm about to suffocate."

Then there was the guest who asked a friend, "Are you planning to spend the winter in Palm Beach?" to which the response was, "Are you kidding? I'd rather have root canal for all eternity." IB

BUT WE'RE NOT BITTER

Sauza

TRES GENERACIONES

PERSEVERANCIA · TRADICIÓN · 1873

The beautiful blue agave grows naturally in the Jalisco region of Mexico around the town of Tequila.

That's the way we like it. So that's the way we leave it. Natural. Because that way, our tequila tastes of… well… agave. Pure and simple.

It doesn't taste of pesticides. It doesn't taste of herbicides. And it doesn't have the bitterness that comes from some cheaper production processes, either.

What all this means is that, like all our tequila, Sauza® Tres Generaciones® doesn't require the flavour enhancers that others have to add to mask less pleasant tastes.

Sauza® Tres Generaciones® tastes like tequila should taste. We know you'll enjoy it. That's why you won't find a trace of bitterness.

LOOK HERE

For our second annual Style issue, we scoured the city for 10 men and women with a look all their own. The list we settled on spans the spectrum from the young and funky to the sophisticated and polished, but as different as these folks may be, they have one thing in common: a sense of dressing that conveys personality. They're not about following trends but about expressing attitude and creativity, and you can get a sense of that in their answers to our questions about everything from their favorite shops to their most embarrassing fashion faux pas.

The issue also includes a Q&A with Boston-educated designer Michael Bastian, who's drawn raves for his focus on reviving American menswear classics, and a nostalgic fashion spread—both by fashion editor Victor Vargas. Then there's self-proclaimed dork Sam Walters' advice on style to keep us from taking it all too seriously.

SEND US A SIGN

As much as I love this city, it's true: There are some things about it that are truly frustrating ("Annoying Boston," Oct. 11). Not in the city itself, but in the surrounding towns there's a quaint custom that only "minor" streets deserve street signs. In Arlington, for instance, you won't know you've come across Mass. Ave. from the street signs posted, and mid-sized streets are only marked when they cross a major street that isn't marked. I'm not sure whether this is a vestige of Yankee frugality, or a way to remind out-of-towners that they don't belong here. But it does help the sale of Metro Boston maps.

PURE BULL

While visiting your city, we came across the photograph on page 66 of your Oct. 11 issue. The animal you identified as a yak is in fact a Texas Longhorn.

FRIENDS WITH BENEFITS

I enjoyed "How to Win Friends and Influence People (Beantown Edition)" (Oct. 11). There are loads of advertisements to keep us updated about events, but newcomers in and out of the city are more comforted by knowing that we all feel timid at first. The testimonials were similar to my own experience, and just as rewarding in the long run. Being an avid reader of your magazine, I've found the best places in Boston to have fun and better establish my social life. Thanks.

Bouillabaisse with garlic croutons

The Burger Trilogy

A Late-Night Miel

Running his fingers along the rim of a Steelite plate stenciled with a geometric honeycomb weave, executive chef Didier Montarou says that every aspect of his new brasserie is meant to pay homage to southern France—from the sunny color scheme to the floral spices to the olive oil chandelier in the private dining room. Not to mention miel, the French word for honey that gives Miel its name. "This will be classic cuisine 'Provence du Soleil,'" Montarou explains.

Miel sits several paces into Boston's newest luxury landmark, the InterContinental Hotel—the towering glass façade of which spans nearly an entire block of Atlantic Avenue waterfront. The paint on the walls is pale butter yellow, and an antiqued breakfront housing tall glass urns of herbes de Provence casually encloses the entrance to Boston's first authentic Provençal-themed brasserie, as well as one of the city's only eateries open 24/7—Dunkin' Donuts aside.

During a pre-opening tour of the brasserie's bustling kitchen, some 40 staffers busy themselves with last-minute run-throughs of fish stocks, omelets and basil pistous. Fusing classic and contemporary dishes, Montarou collaborated with two-star Michelin chef Jacques Chibois to construct a menu that celebrates the Côte d'Azur's sweeping lavender fields, its lush olive groves and, of course, its active beehives. "Honey is [a central part of] four or five dishes on the menu," Montarou says, alluding to the section of Miel's menu called "Du miel dans mon assiette" ("Some honey on my plate"). Here, duck magret pairs with lavender honey and a hibiscus-celeriac purée ($21), while orange honey sweetens crème brûlée ($9). And since the eats are offered 'round the clock, scenesters can feed the late-night munchies with the decadent Burger Trilogy ($15) or a bowl of the house bouillabaisse ($18), while hotel guests who wake up peckish can sneak downstairs for an old-fashioned refrigerator raid, albeit served atop triple-layered linens by waiters clad in Provençal garb. Truffled scrambled eggs ($17), anyone? Just ask for the breakfast menu.

Where the brasserie fudges authenticity somewhat is in its setting. For instance, the Moulin Rouge–themed champagne bar's low lighting and burgundy leather wall paneling conjure lusty Montmartre more readily than, say, summertime in Avignon. However, though hardly a sweep of the French Riviera, the view from either of the restaurant's two indoor seating areas (one sleek, the other more rustic—and closer to the fireplace) still rates as a prized panorama of Boston's inner harbor and, come springtime, will provide al fresco seating. Given a little imagination (and a glass or two of rosé), who knows? Monte Carlo may be closer than you think. Miel, InterContinental Hotel, 510 Atlantic Ave., Boston (617-747-1000). —Elizabeth Bomze

Off the Handle

Chelsea Handler is best-known for her comedy work on Oxygen's Girls Behaving Badly, as well as E!'s The Chelsea Handler Show. She's also the author of the book My Horizontal Life: A Collection of One-Night Stands. Handler performs Nov. 10 and 11 at the Comedy Connection.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Have you spent much time in Boston?

Chelsea Handler: A lot, actually. My parents have a house out on the Vineyard, and I used to come up every year for the Head of the Charles. This is my first time performing in Boston, though. It should be a lot of fun.

IB: You were born to a Jewish dad and Mormon mom. Do you wake up every morning and thank the comedy gods?

CH: No, I wake up every morning and just thank god they didn't make me grow up Mormon. At one point they pulled me aside and said, you have to choose now if you want to be a Mormon. I thought, "Hmm… no drinking, no partying, no sex? I'll pick the dreidel."

IB: So what's going on with The Chelsea Handler Show. Is there another season on the way?

CH: We're still waiting to find out. There's definitely going to be something—it could be a late-night talk show, it could be the same as before, but there'll be something.

IB: Ever worry that some of your pranks on Girls Behaving Badly might scare off Oxygen viewers tuning in to see a rerun of Not Without My Daughter or something?

CH: I bet it does, because some of it scares me. But a lot of Oxygen viewers live in constant fear as it is.

IB: Your act focuses strongly on your love of booze and sex. Are you drinking right now?

CH: Nope, but I'm driving to Vegas as we speak so that I can drink a lot.

IB: Are you having sex right now?

CH: No, I only have sex in the back seat of cars.

IB: You wrote a book about all the one-night stands you've had over the years. Do you think that somewhere up there (or down there) Wilt Chamberlain is smiling?

CH: Definitely. He's actually in the book, so I'm sure he's excited. He also makes an appearance in my next book, Are You There, Vodka? It's Me, Chelsea. It's another serious novella.

Kids Rock... Much to the delight of pint-sized, would-be rockers, the rapidly expanding Paul Green School of Rock—the real-life version of Jack Black's School of Rock flick—is setting up shop in Allston/Brighton, with classes scheduled to begin in January. Established in 1998 with locations nationwide, the part-day school mentors kids aged 10–17 in the art of rocking out. Students endure an intensive training, with plenty of opportunities for a wailin' good time thrown in. Currently, the school's All Star group is on tour playing a mélange of classic rock songs. The Boston students will play Pink Floyd's The Wall in its entirety at the end of their first semester. Locally, you can catch the precocious All Stars at 1 pm on Dec. 26 at Boston's First Act, the showroom for the Boston-based guitar manufacturing company behind the current Volkswagen campaign, and later that night at Bill's Bar on Lansdowne Street. (617-910-6487); www.schoolofrock.com.

Home on th'Orange... Sure, there's a chichi home store or gift boutique on every last block of the South End. In Jamaica Plain? Not so much. But with the opening of On Centre, Orange Line straphangers now have a place to shop for the niftiest knickknacks, just a few steps away from the tastiest cod cakes and goat curry in town. Located in a former law office on (you guessed it) Centre Street, the shop represents the first foray into the retail arena by Philip Celeste—a former designer for Robinwood, which did designs for Restoration Hardware, Pottery Barn and Anthropologie. Prime picks include jewelry from artist Rina Young out of Brooklyn, caviar sets and cheese-and-cracker trays by local potter Jill Rosenwald, and mini journals and photo albums from Angela Adams. 6 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-522-2255

BEAUTY BUZZ

The Cutting Edge

The days when a 5 o'clock shadow was sexy are happily over. Today, a clean, close encounter with a razor is de rigueur for men, and the number of lotions and potions meant for guys has in turn proliferated, from mass-market manufacturers on up. (Drugstore.com, for instance, now sells more than 75 different types of shaving cream.)

Last month, the Art of Shaving, a high-end shaving-products retailer, set up shop in Copley Place. The store, all wood and burgundy leather, is masculine and dignified, with fixtures showcasing the latest models of the barbershop staple—the straight-edge razor. Yes, shaving has become something of an extreme sport, as men take to experimenting with straight-edge razors an sharpening strops, tools that make groomi downright macho.

The company has developed a four-step reg men to replicate the authentic barbershop exper ence of yesteryear—prepare, lather up, shave an moisturize. Its skincare and haircare products ($ to $65) are formulated from botanical ingredien and pure essential oils, with not a trace of alcoho synthetic dye or synthetic fragrance—which cou irritate that newly sleek, baby-smooth neck. G ready to bust some beard. The Art of Shavin Copley Place, Boston (617-236-0332). www.thear shaving.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

Pressed Sandwiches

Bite This... With locations in the Financial and Seaport Districts, Pressed Sandwiches has plans to open a third locale in Downtown Crossing's Bedford Street this month. The newest spot is much smaller than the first two—and it's takeout only—but it'll offer the same lunch menu, including the popular Cuban sandwich (marinated pork, ham, cheddar, pickles, chipotle aïoli and coleslaw on ciabatta) and an extensive breakfast menu. 85 Bedford St., Boston. www.pressedsandwiches.com.

New From Nepal... With a name like Kathmandu Spice, the newest addition to the Arlington dining scene leaves little mystery as to its culinary bent. But the ethnic eatery, which opened on Mass. Ave. in mid-October, offers more than just standard Nepalese fare. Yes, chef Kalaivanan Chandrasekaran serves up chicken momos (dumplings in chili-spiked tomato sauce), goat curry and spicy Nepalese potato salad, but the rest of the menu jumps all over the map, with dishes including chow mein and barbecued lamb chops. To wash down these disparate bites, Kathmandu Spice also offers a full bar. 166 Mass. Ave., Arlington (781-316-1755). www.kathmanduspice.com.

Felino "Pops" Samson

Felino Flies Solo... It didn't take long for Felino Samson, former chef at the recently purchased Bomboa, to find a new home. This December, Samson will open his first solo venture in the old Perdix spot on Tremont Street. Called Pops (Samson's nickname at Bomboa), the boîte will seat 48, with more space on the patio. Despite his fine-dining background, "Pops" hopes to make Pops a neighborhood hangout with plans to price every item on the new-American menu under $20.

My Name Is Sasso... The folks behind the late-night North End hot spot Lucca will open a Back Bay restaurant this fall in the Huntington Ave. space that formerly housed Blackfin Chophouse. Sasso will feature modern Italian cuisine courtesy of Lucca chef David Ross, who'll oversee both kitchens. But don't expect a carbon copy: The food will be similar in style but a tad more upscale. The dining room will seat 150 and feature floor-to-ceiling windows, bar and lounge areas, and a private dining area overlooking the main floor. —RL

AWW, RATS

In which an international rodent expert makes a house call

One recent morning Heather discovered that mice had torn open the bag of dog food under the sink. She was clear about what needed to be done: something, by me, preferably while she was at work. So I lowered my voice several octaves and said, "Don't worry, honey, I'll take care of it." The next morning, I caught me a critter, face down on a glue trap. Bingo.

Unfortunately, the sight of the dead mouse made me more squeamish than a text message from Mark Foley. I wondered if it was possible to rent one of those mechanical arms that are used to defuse bombs or open radioactive containers. In lieu of that, I approached the corpse with work gloves, a trash bag and a hammer, just in case he was faking, waiting to wrench himself free and leap onto my face—all 6 ounces of furry fury.

I managed, eventually, to confirm the mouse's deadness and throw him away. I put the dog food back under the cabinet and declared victory. The next day, the dog food was ripped open again. Clearly, bolder measures were needed. It was time to contact the Leopard (as I call him), Dr. Bruce Colvin.

Colvin has a Ph.D. in biological sciences. He was in charge of rodent control on the Big Dig for a decade. He trained the staff at the Dalai Lama's palace in rodent countermeasures. He's a member of the D-Con Rat Pack, which is like the Ghostbusters of rodents. And now he's in my apartment.

Sure, it's always emasculating for a guy to call another guy for help with a home issue—when our dishwasher broke, I took the whole thing apart before admitting that I know nothing about dishwashers—but where rodents are concerned, I shoot first and ask questions later.

Colvin opens the cabinet under the sink, where we keep the dog food. "Oh, party central," he says. There are shredded bits of bag everywhere. I mention that I had mice in my apartment in Beacon Hill, so maybe I'm just a big grub. "It doesn't mean you're a slob if you have mice," he says. "There's no economic correlation with rodent problems. When I'm in a new city and I want to find rats, I say, 'Take me to the yuppies.' Where you've got a high concentration of people and lots of restaurants, you might have a problem." So when my buddy Dave parked his Saab outside my apartment in Southie and got his tire slashed, that was probably nothing more than an aggressive rodent-control measure on the part of one of my neighbors.

"The mice in your apartment are descendants of mice that came here in the 1600s," Colvin explains. Great. I've got Brahmin mice. He goes on to tell me that mice simply take advantage of people's tendency to give them convenient food and shelter. A nice, dark cabinet stocked with dog food and a hole in the wall for sink utilities is pretty much like setting up a mouse B&B. If I want the mice to go away, I have to make changes to their habitat.

But that would require work, so I ask another logical question: Is there any hope that my dog might eat the mice? "Most dogs aren't good ratters," Colvin says. "And cats in particular, people expect them to chase rodents. Well, a cat would much rather eat garbage. Rats have teeth and they bite back."

There's another important topic on my mind: sewer rats. "So, it's just an urban legend that rats can come out of the sewer through your toilet, right?" Colvin is matter-of-fact. "No, that actually happens," he replies. "There's no water in the pipe to the sewer unless you're flushing the toilet or running the sink, so the rat can walk right up the pipe to the back of your toilet. From there, he only has to swim through the water trap—and rats are good swimmers. Some rats use the toilet to get in and out of a house for food." Just when I was feeling good about beating my mouse problem, Colvin admits that my toilet is a pet door for amphibious butt-biting sewer rats.

> THE SIGHT OF THE DEAD MOUSE MADE ME MORE SQUEAMISH THAN A TEXT MESSAGE FROM MARK FOLEY

On his way out the door, Colvin gives me two high-tech D-Con mousetraps and wishes me luck. But my priorities have shifted in the past five minutes. Dog food–pillaging mice aren't as serious a problem as I thought. I'm off to Home Depot to find a cast-iron locking toilet seat lid. IB

Seeing Green

With another Celtics season ready to tip off, what can we expect from the boys in green?

As far as sports go, we're in the midst of a pretty strange fall season here in Boston. No one feels like talking about the Sox much after they so gracefully shat the bed in September, the Pats are sort of a nonstory (in the sense that we can only obsess over Belichick and Brady in so many ways) and the Bruins are… well, they're the same old crappy Bruins. But the strangest thing of all has been the buzz surrounding the guys that used to dominate the headlines in this town. Of course I'm talking about the New England Revolution. Ahh, just kidding, but seriously, it's only a matter of time before soccer really explodes in the States. (I can't even type that with a straight face.)

I'm talking about the Celtics. A team that finished a dismal 33–49 last season, and added only one proven veteran and two relatively raw point guards to the mix this year, yet starts the 2006 campaign behind the strength of an awful lot of local optimism.

So where do I stand on the Celtics this season? To be honest, I'm not sure yet. I know Sports Illustrated picked the C's to finish 14th in the East (granted SI also picked the Dolphins and Daunte Culpepper's papier-mâché knee to win the Super Bowl), and the other day on the radio I heard Bill Simmons predict that they'd win upwards of 47 games. That's a pretty drastic range of potential success (or lack thereof), and it shows just how much of a mystery the Celtics are at this point. But with all we don't know about this team, here are five things that we do know, for better or for worse.

They have Paul Pierce: Yeah, I know, I'm not winning any awards for investigative journalism with that shocker, but Pierce, and Pierce alone, is the difference between legitimacy and the basement. In the NBA, more than in any other sport, the team with the best player wins, and save for a couple of matchups against the Heat, Cavs, Lakers, and Mavs, the best player on the floor is going to be wearing green. Pierce's presence will, at the very least, bring the C's within striking distance every night, and striking distance is always a good thing—even if you're not a Bruce Willis fan.

They don't have Steve Nash: Again nothing you didn't know, but it's important when you consider the style of basketball the Celtics are looking to play. Doc Rivers is going to have the Green running faster than Forrest Gump on blow. They'll push the ball every chance they get, use their depth to tire out the opposition and initiate a brand of basketball reminiscent of the Phoenix Suns. That brings us back to Nash. Without a point guard of his freakish ability, the run-and-gun game doesn't fly in the NBA, and while I'm practically frothing at the mouth over the prospect of watching Rondo and Telfair all year, I'm not sold that they're ready to shoulder that type of burden.

They'll be playing with heavy heart: Obviously, Red Auerbach's day-to-day involvement with the team and its players dwindled greatly as the years went on, but I don't think that his death won't have an effect. While many of the guys on the team probably didn't know Red that well, his spirit will certainly have a presence within the organization this year and no doubt lead to some inspired play.

The C's improved, but they weren't alone: Take a look at last year's playoff teams in the East: The Bucks grabbed Charlie Villanueva and Ruben Patterson; this off-season; the Pacers reclaimed Al Harrington; the Bulls nabbed Ben Wallace, LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and Gilbert

> PIERCE, AND PIERCE ALONE, IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN LEGITIMACY AND THE BASEMENT.

Arenas are all a year stronger and wiser; and the Pistons and Nets still have a talented core of veterans. Combine that with the fact that teams like the Raptors, Hawks, Bobcats and Magic are just as young and frisky as the Celtics, and you can see that to say, "The Celtics are definitely making the playoffs this year," is also to say, "I've definitely been eating my share of magic mushrooms."

It's going to be fun: Chalk it up to the recent struggles, but we just don't approach the Celtics with the same over-the-top, life-or-death insanity we do with the Pats or the Sox, and that makes Celtics season one of the most enjoyable times of the year to be a fan in Boston. Are they on the verge of raising another banner? Eh, probably not, but after watching the next six months of Celtics basketball unfold, we'll have a better idea of how far away No. 17 might be.

Soroff ON

LUKE RUSSERT

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Boston College junior Luke Russert cohosts the XM satellite radio sports talk show 60/20 Sports (on Channel 143 of the XM Sports Nation) with political strategist and presidential advisor James Carville, in addition to doing appearances on CN8's sports show Out of Bounds. The 21-year-old only child of NBC Washington bureau chief and Meet the Press host Tim Russert and Vanity Fair contributing editor and best-selling author Maureen Orth, Luke was raised in Washington, D.C., and graduated from St. Albans prep school. He has interned for ESPN and is a communications major with a minor in history.

Jonathan Soroff: You're still a little pischer college student, and yet you're this big broadcasting guy. How does that feel?

Luke Russert: I'm just thankful for the opportunity, and to have a chance to do a national show is very special. Not many people in college get to be part of this new medium, and satellite radio really is the future of radio. What's great is that I came in at the perfect time, because they're still experimenting with new things. It's sort of like cable TV in the '80s. Y'know, "Why don't we put a 21-year-old kid on the radio and see what he has to say?"

JS: So is satellite radio going to put old-fashioned radio out of business?

LR: Eventually, I think so. Down the road, XM and Sirius will probably merge is my guess. When you buy a new car now, a lot of them come with free satellite radio for a few months. Plus, the younger generation is already really into it, and why not? You get 200 channels, and no commercials.

JS: By the time you were 16, you'd been to two Super Bowls, a World Series and an NBA Final. What's left?

LR: The Masters. I wanna see the green jacket, and what's so interesting about it to me is that every other sporting event is so commercialized these days, but it's not "The Masters presented by Big Giant Bank." It's the Masters by Augusta. You have to play by their rules.

JS: Greatest sporting event of all time?

LR: That's tough. For me, I'd say it's the national championship game for college football. I think that's the event that really shines in this country. Across the world, I'd have to say World Cup soccer, and as my generation ages, I think you'll see increasing interest in it.

JS: One athlete you're in awe of?

LR: Cal Ripken Jr., for the streak of 2,632 consecutive games. Just to play that many games in a row is a tremendous feat, and never to get hurt in a 21-year career. Right now, LeBron James, the sheer athleticism, the way he runs down the court. He's a man among boys, and he's 21 years old. That's just unfathomable.

"I GOT THE OPPORTUNITY BECAUSE OF WHO MY FATHER IS, BUT I GOT THE DEAL ITSELF BECAUSE OF WHAT I CAN DO."

JS: Is your future sports or political journalism?

LR: Both. I'm very interested in politics and maybe somewhere down the line I'll get involved in that, but right now, it's sports.

JS: How much of your success is due to being Tim Russert's son?

LR: There's no doubt—and I'm the first to admit it—that my dad got me in the door, and there were a lot of blogs criticizing that, saying it's pure nepotism. But before we even signed a contract or did anything, we did trial runs of the show, because they're not going to hire someone who can't do the job. Obviously, I got the opportunity because of who my father is, but I got the deal itself because of what I can do.

JS: So does your father put on a Darth Vader voice and say, "Luke… I am your father."

LR: [Laughs.] I didn't even know about that movie until way after it came out. I'm actually named after [the 1967 Paul Newman movie] Cool Hand Luke.

JS: So what's your favorite sport?

LR: I love 'em all. I'm a big fan of all team sports, but basketball, I'd have to say. For me, they're the best athletes.

JS: Greatest moment in sports history that you witnessed and one you wished you'd seen?

LR: The one I wished I'd seen—but I was probably still in the process of being created—was the 1980 U.S. hockey game [against] Russia. The one I saw was in 1999, when I went to the Final Four, Duke vs. UConn, and the Duke team, which had been the best college team for years, got beaten. A complete upset.

JS: Favorite gametime snack?

LR: If it's home, Doritos, or I'll order Chinese food: dumplings and spring rolls. If I'm watching a game out in Boston, I love the wings from Roggie's in Cleveland Circle or a steak wrap from Lir in Back Bay. But if I'm at a game, I'm a hot dog connoisseur.

JS: One of your teachers at St. Albans wrote that book Prep, and one of the characters was based on you…

LR: No, he's a composite of some of us in my class. When I was reading the book, I was thinking, "This sounds a lot like us…"

JS: What part did you recognize as yourself?

LR: He's sly with the girls and he's a great athlete but still gets good grades. [Laughs.]

JS: Who'd win at arm-wrestling: you or Carville?

LR: Oh, me. Carville runs like a maniac every day, but I'm about 215-220 pounds and he's maybe 150. Plus he's old. He's, like, 60.

JS: Who'd win in a battle of wits?

LR: He has me right now. However, when we're speaking, I think it's easier for people to understand me than him 'cause of that accent.

JS: Did you know him before the show?

LR: I've known him since I was 5 years old. When I was a kid, I'd go to his farm in Virginia and shoot pellet guns and ride ATVs. He's from Louisiana. He's a real backwoods kinda guy.

JS: Is he as much of a cracker as he seems?

LR: [Laughs.] He's an outdoorsman.

JS: Do you and your Dad talk sports?

LR: All the time. It's a big part of our rel tionship.

JS: Do you mostly agree or disagree?

LR: It depends. He's interesting becau he's an older guy but he's evolved, and l likes when someone like Deion Sande dances after a touchdown. He thinks tha funny, whereas a lot of people his age a all uptight about that stuff.

JS: Most you ever won betting on a sporting event?

LR: Probably that Duke/UConn game. A it wasn't money. If I won, a friend's moth who went to Duke would have to throw r a Duke Loses celebratory party, and she h to rent out a place and buy the food.

JS: In the interest of fairness, I should tell yo I went to Duke and I hate you right now. H about the most you ever lost?

LR: Maybe 50 or 75 dollars on Smar Jones for the Triple Crown.

JS: Favorite sport venue?

LR: I love Fenway Park because it's so in mate and you're so close to the game, an love the Verizon Center in D.C.

JS: Most overrated athlete in pro sports?

LR: Peyton Manning, by far. He's gr during the regular season, but in my op ion you can't be considered good unl you do something in the postseason, a he can never win the big game.

JS: Most underappreciated sport?

LR: Women's basketball. I went to last ye championship game, Duke vs. Maryland, a it was one of the best games I've ever seen JS: Last question: In one word, what's the Gospel According to Luke*?*

LR: One word to describe me is driven. very aware of the criticism from peo who say, "Oh, you've been handed eve thing," but I'm very driven because I w to be a big-time player in sports journal for years to come. IB

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

10 with Style

If fashion's a religion, then meet some of the high priests and priestesses.

Style. Either you've got it, or you don't.

Audrey Hepburn, Jackie O, Cary Grant and Gianni Agnelli had it. So, too, do Lil' Kim, Marilyn Manson, Dennis Rodman and Cher, although in a much quirkier way.

But whether it's Savile Row understated or Bob Mackie outrageous, Jacob the Jeweler flashy or Brooks Brothers tame, classically elegant like a little black dress or in-your-face like the haughtiest haute couture from Paris' enfant terrible du jour, that ineffable quality we call style boils down to one thing: owning it. The stylish person has to project a vibe that's uniquely personal and look comfortable in his or her own skin. Or, more to the point, in the garments they've chosen to cover their skin.

Whatever the trend-lemmings or jaded malcontents may say, Boston is a highly stylish city, and singling out a mere 10 individuals was tough. In selecting our 10 With Style, we decided, for purely practical reasons, to disqualify those who work in any aspect of design, whether it's fashion retailing, interior decorating, hair styling, performing in drag, arranging flowers or designing buildings. Style is a given in those professions (although there are certainly plenty of practitioners who seem not to realize it).

Instead, we tried to assemble an eclectic group who project a certain inimitable something in the way they dress and present themselves to the world. You may or may not share their (or our) taste, but one thing is for sure: Each of them is an original, which is what true style is all about.

Lisa Pierpont

television producer

A mother of two and busy producer for WCVB's Chronicle, Pierpont also contributes to magazines and Web sites and always makes an appearance at the city's most glittering social events (never wearing the same dress, it seems). She's Wonder Woman with a wardrobe to die for. Fashion-forward and hip without ever looking either costume-y or clone-like, her unique style is enhanced by the fact that she doesn't take any of it too seriously.

Briefly describe "your look."
Stevie Nicks meets Agent Emma Peel, crossbred with Thumbelina.

Where do you shop?
My temples: Matsu, Stil, Stel's, Calypso and Barneys. For cheap thrills: Habit in Southie, Abercrombie and Diesel. At Oona's second-hand clothing, I scored a killer Persian lamb coat that brings onlookers to their knees. Thirty bucks.

Current favorite outfit?
Moss green asymmetrical dress by Cotelac (Matsu); a ruby cross pendant I picked up for 10 smackers at a scrappy antiques store; Pons Quintana wedge boots; brown suede duster from my fashion-queen mother.

Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
I burrowed a tunnel to Barneys and perform stealth nocturnal missions to switch out clothing. Shhhh, don't tell.

How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
I don't believe in retirement. Work, work, work those clothes.

Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
Rozae Nichols designs pastry for the female body. I dig Phillip Lim, Marni and Hanii Y threads, too. I scoop up H&M jewelry and tights, Target leather jackets (I had a clothing artist paint a design on the back), Hadley Pollet metallic belts and piles of Hanes tanks.

Which famous person's style do you most admire?
I admire the styles I can't pull off myself. Jennifer Aniston always looks so simple and chic. I try, but I end up recklessly looping leather chokers around and around my neck. I muck it all up.

Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
Kate Moss has trailblazing taste. It's probably why she's a skillionaire. "What would Kate wear?" I ask myself. Then: "Why am I not a skillionaire?" It's a depressing internal conversation.

Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
I sported platforms and a miniskirt to an engagement party at an oh-so-proper country club. Tragically inappropriate. I also had a messy divorce with the color beige.

One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Anything strapless over a blouse. Have you seen this look? What misogynist was behind that? Hang that person upside down by their toenails, please.

Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
Puffed sleeves. Snow White was on a hit list for a reason.

Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
I'm a sucker for bell-bottoms. Very Mod Squad.

One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
The one that got away? A lacrosse jersey from my college boyfriend. Come to think of it, they both got away.

Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
A skirt once fell down to my ankles while I was walking on Newbury Street. Since then, I have triple-safety-pinned all clothing with a waistband.

Where do you find the closet space?
I'm looking for some storage—do you have any room?

Frances Rivera
TV news anchor

Channel 7's stunning Filipino anchor is always the picture of polished professionalism on-air, but when she's away from the cameras, she lets her hair down. Although she never strays into the realm of the tragically trendy and remains tastefully ladylike at all times, she can get away with more edgy looks when she's not at work. Unafraid of supersaturated colors or bold patterns, she has an eye for what suits her flawless bone structure and tall frame. When you're as gorgeous as she is, it's difficult not to look great, but her tremendous sense of style elevates greatness to sheer perfection.

Briefly describe "your look."
For work, I wear what I call an anchor costume, so for real life, I like rebelling—tragically enough, sometimes as a full-on fashion victim.
Where do you shop?
I'm lazy, so online.
Current favorite outfit?
Layering long tunics and cardigans over leggings and ballet flats.
Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
In high school, I did. But not now.
How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
If I could answer that, I'd have more closet space!
Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
Diane von Furstenberg, Chanel, Nanette Lepore, Tory Burch, Juicy Couture.
Which famous person's style do you most admire?
No one. Everyone's manufactured by [stylist] Rachel Zoe, anyway.
Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
When in doubt, I invoke the "What would Audrey [Hepburn] wear?" barometer.
Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
I still make them. Overdressing for events. In one instance, I never made it past the parking lot. I made my husband take me back home to change.
One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Camouflage! But then again, just last week I bought a camo tank at Target. I'm daring myself to wear it.
Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
Uggs. But I can't let go.
Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
I dread the return of wayfarers.
One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
Juicy tracksuits. You can't have too many sweat-xedos!
Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
I ruined a pink Ellen Tracy suede jacket by typing away on a computer with an uncovered marker right under my wrists. Little did I know that each keystroke was making huge black stains on the sleeves. But I still have it—I'm considering altering the sleeves to 3/4 length!
Where do you find the closet space?
Our guest room closets, my husband's office, my work dressing room, the trunk of my car.

Paul Karger

Perhaps because he's a twin, this young Turk of investment banking has developed strong personal style that refuses to resemble anyone else or to bow to either trends the stodgy uniform of his profession. The result is a look that's original yet appropria professional without being buttoned-down. By day, he looks bespoke in impeccab tailored suits, and by night, he looks fly in whatever gear he's sporting to the trendi hot spots. Proof positive that he knows how to dress: He even looks good at the gy That's what we call stylish.

Briefly describe "your look."
Savile Row meets West Broadway: modern vintage.
Where do you shop?
Alan Bilzerian (Boston), Detour (New York), Domenico Vacca (Miami), Charvet (Paris).
Current favorite outfit?
Antique denim jeans, untucked Borelli button-down, J.M. Weston brown leather boots, Audemars Piguet timepiece.
Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
No real tracking system. However, my closet is sorted by color.
How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
It's all about constant innovation and reinvention. Some things are retired with the tag still on them. Others disintegrate in the wash.
Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
Paul Smith, Thom Browne, Duncan Quinn and Comme des Garçons.
Which famous person's style do you most admire?
Lenny Kravitz.
Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
Yes. Steve McQueen in the origin Thomas Crown Affair, and Sean Conne as James Bond.
Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
I wore a zip-up Versace blazer to a form class picture.
One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Pleated pastel pants and Birkenstocks.
Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
Slim ties.
Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
Ninja Turtle socks.
One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
Ninja Turtle socks.
Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
Soy sauce on a Brioni tie.
Where do you find the closet space?
Have you seen my loft?

Massiel Grullon

A painter who marches to the beat of her own drummer, she's got a distinctive style that's theatrical without being contrived and eye-popping without looking ridiculous. Fierce and funky, she dresses according to her ever-changing moods, and can go from a Japanese-schoolgirl look one day to a blaxploitation super-diva the next. Constant reinvention, experimentation and an exuberance bordering on the outrageous (you never know what vibrant color her hair will be) give her a look that makes Madonna's stylistic changes over the years seem glacially slow and demure by comparison. An absolute original.

Briefly describe "your look."
I guess my look is colorful, random, old-school, loud, and... crazy?
Where do you shop?
Thrift stores, yard sales, vintage stores. Anywhere that's cheap!
Current favorite outfit?
My Nirvana band T-shirt and my skinny jeans.
Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
No. I wear whatever fits my mood.
How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
Never! I keep all my clothes and never get tired of them. I still wear clothes I had when I was 15!
Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
I'm not into labels. Whatever looks good is most important to me.
Which famous person's style do you most admire?
Karen O from the Yeah Yeah Yeahs.
Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
Yes, I tend to imitate and combine styles from the past, like the '60s, '70s and '80s: a little punk, old-school hip-hop and vintage. One day I'll dress up as Liza Minnelli, and the next I'll look like Prince.
Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
I don't know... fake eyelashes and plastic jewelry.
One style you'd never be caught dead in?
A polo shirt with khaki pants.
Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
Those Louis Vuitton baggy things: so overrated!
Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
Polka-dots!
One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
My bondage pants from Hot Topic when I was a teenager.
Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
I'm an artist, so I'm used to paint stains and rips all the time!
Where do you find the closet space?
Eh... in my closet?

Matt Cloutier

As a residential real estate broker selling high-end properties, this prized customer of Barneys New York is always impeccably turned out in the latest fashions, without being precious about it. Clear on what he likes and doesn't like, and conscious of what looks good on him, he's excellent at experimentation and altering his look without going overboard. A believer in "less is more," he wears clothin that's always of the finest quality without screaming designer names, and he look as chic dressed down for brunch in the South End as he does dressed up for a busi ness meeting or a night on the town.

Briefly describe "your look."
I tend to wear designer clothes that are comfortable and not too formal: slim cuts, dark denim, large accessories—big watches, belts, etc. I like clothes I can wear to meet clients and then out to dinner with friends. By taking my own spin on style and matching that up with my comfort level, I think it makes for a pretty good combination. Items that stand out in a subtle way are usually what will end up in my closet.

Where do you shop?
Barneys is my favorite for a wide variety, but I also tend to like the smaller stores that constantly change their inventory, like Item in Provincetown.

Current favorite outfit?
Nudie jeans, Rogues Gallery vintage tee, Vuitton driving loafers, an Ever hoodie and my Panerai.

Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
I don't pay much attention to rotating things. If I like something, I make sure I get good use out of it!

How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
Once the season is over, so are the clothes. Until next year… sometimes.

Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
Barneys Co-op, Cloak, Nice Collective, Ever, Nudie, Prada, Michael Kors, Rogues, Louis Vuitton, Theory and Dior.

Which famous person's style do you most admire?
James Denton.

Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
I use many people as a template. I have friends with great fashion sense. I pick up on things I like on certain people and apply a version of it to myself. Besides, if any of them don't like what I'm wearing, I can remind them where the inspiration came from.

Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
Z Cavaricci with an I.O.U sweatshirt! I was in seventh grade. It was the '90s.

One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Drag.

Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
I'm torn between too much bling and Miami Vice.

Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
The tight roll!

One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
Versace pants that I loved, but giving them away wa the only chance I had at not wearing them again.

Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
I was at a friend's house sitting on the washing ma chine, talking, when I slid off and ripped (all the wa up) Prada pants that I had picked up from the tailor th same afternoon. It was horrible!

Where do you find the closet space?
Wherever I can. I rotate things pretty well, stor clothes in luggage I'm not using, slowly picking u clothes from the dry cleaner. I find ways to make work.

Ricardo H. Rodriguez

real estate broker

This smokin'-hot Latin fashion plate was born and raised in Cali, Colombia, and moonlights as an actor when he's not selling real estate for Coldwell Banker. He and his equally stylish husband, Michael Kelley, are fixtures on the top-tier party scene, and he's always beautifully turned out in an outfit that accentuates his flawless physique (without making him look like a Madonna backup dancer). He's never under- or overdressed and always looks superb.

Briefly describe "your look."

Confident, very personal and organic. Comfortable, simple, fun, edgy, playful, clean. It's not about working a trend but staying ahead. I also think I'm very urban and a bit of a dandy. For me, style is emotionally driven, so I wear what I feel like wearing. Ultimately, it's not about wearing the latest clothes. It's about confidence.

Where do you shop?

There are some places I don't, but let's not go there. Otherwise, almost everywhere. Boston has very good fashion, but you have to hunt for it. The problem is that stores carry two extremes: Either they cater to the J. Crew mentality, or they push this über-signature conceptual stuff that only a teenager could wear with dignity. But I think Barneys is kicking ass. It's fun, youthful and elegant, and they carry Dior shoes. Hot.

Current favorite outfit?

I don't think I have "outfits." I have pieces I'm enamored with and think are gorgeous. For over a year now, I've been collecting pocket squares. It's a way to add playfulness and color to a suit, and they're perfect for me, since I hate wearing ties. Against my grandma's advice—"Don't wear things the second time they come around if you were old enough to wear them the first time"—I adore this '80s-inspired Band of Outsiders fitted oxford shirt and skinny striped tie. I also love this Trovata herringbone jacket with oversized gold medallion–like buttons. I feel so cool wearing that, which is kinda cheesy to admit, but I do. So deal with it.

Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?

I don't care. When I like something, I wear it until I get something I like better.

How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?

For me it's more about: Do I feel it, or not? Sometimes I wear something once. Sometimes I wear something over and over. It's about my comfort, not letting the clothes dictate how I look.

Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?

Overall, labels don't matter to me. I think the key is not to make yourself a walking billboard, but to find what you like. However, I do have some favorites. For shoes, definitely Gucci or Dior. I love Isaia suits, because they're so well constructed and rich, but I also enjoy the suits at Benetton, which are inexpensive and cut well. I love John Varvatos boots. Armani and Brioni ties. A fun Dolce e Gabbana or McQueen shirt is good for the mojo. I'm sure if you asked me next year, I'd give a very different answer. Except for the shoes. Gucci and Dior are the best!

Which famous person's style do you most admire?

George Clooney. I think he gets it. He looks comfortable, no matter what he's wearing. The guy just always looks good. Locally, I enjoy the style of two friends: Ken Oringer, the chef and owner of Clio and Toro, who always looks fresh, colorful and joyful, and Bryan Rafanelli, the party planner, who's always dashing.

Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?

I am my own template. Kidding. Not really.

Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?

Actually, the other day I was driving and almost got into an accident because of the flashback. It was June 1996, and I was all into Todd Oldham. I wore these hot black low-waist and superskinny stretch jeans and wrongly paired them with a very tight polo-like shirt in bright orange sheer lace. Yes, lace. I walked into this party and pretended the entire night that I didn't look ridiculous.

One style you'd never be caught dead in?

Athletic/gym clothes as daywear—or worse, eveningwear.

Fashion trend you're sick to death of?

That tired and now ridiculous "California" look. Grown men wearing flip flops everywhere with unfit jeans and caps and T-shirts over thermals. Boring.

Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?

Suits with oversized shoulder pads. Kidding! Kidding!

One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?

The only thing that kills me to give away are shoes. I h onto them and tell myself it's a "collection."

Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?

Boston, January 2006. A very formal party. A guy is wea his tuxedo. He's having a blast in the middle of the fl surrounded by gorgeous girls, the perfect gay dancing p ner. As the night progresses, so do his moves, from fu philanthropist, muse and entertainment entrepreneur

Joan Parker

The wife and collaborator of best-selling mystery writer Robert B. Parker is a supporter of numerous charitable causes and always appears looking smashing at fundraisers, receptions and opening nights. With an affinity for bold colors, prints and textures, she may be a woman of a certain age but she absolutely refuses to look dowdy. Despite her exuberant approach to clothing, she never wears anything that isn't utterly flattering or absolutely appropriate. A rapier wit and an inability to either abide or shovel crap, her straight-from-the-hip personality is perfectly complemented by her iconoclastic, eye-popping taste in fashion.

Briefly describe "your look."
Optimistic.
Where do you shop?
CoCo Collections, 93 Main St. in Andover. It belongs to a dear friend, and she has the greatest stuff.
Current favorite outfit?
Anything that makes me look younger and slimmer.
Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
Are you kidding?
How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
Until I have to send it to the cleaner.
Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
See answer to third question above.
Which famous person's style do you most admire?
Robert B. Parker.
Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
Emulate?
Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
That's my secret.
One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Sensible shoes.
Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
It's hard to get sick of trendy. It doesn't last long enough.
Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
Comeback? Where did it go?
One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
What's Goodwill?
Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
That's too intimate. Not for publication.
Where do you find the closet space?
Bob doesn't really need a closet.

T.J. Douglas

wine distributor

Devilishly handsome and consistently natty, this snappy dresser always looks impeccable, whether he's out for a casual bite to eat with his family or holding a powwow with some bigwigs in the liquor or restaurant business. A former restaurateur himself, he has the flawless personal presentation of an inveterate front-of-the-house guy, but he's easy-going and personable rather than formal or stiff. He might look like he just fell out of the pages of GQ or Esquire, but he's the kind of guy you can sit and have a few beers with. In other words, he's slick without being oily.

Briefly describe "your look."
Classic, with a youthful twist.
Where do you shop?
For unique, casual clothes, I like the Great Put-On in Edgartown.
Current favorite outfit?
Blue pin-striped Hugo Boss suit, light blue Giorgio Armani shirt, brown Cole Haan shoes. Pimp!
Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
I have a two-month-old baby—who has the time?
How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
My pants get retired when the seams start to go.
Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
Hugo Boss, Thomas Pink, John Varvatos, Giorgio Armani.
Which famous person's style do you most admire?
I'm man enough to admit that Brad Pitt looks good in Ocean's Eleven—and I would definitely kill for his wardrobe.
Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
No, I just try to do what feels right.
Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
It's a tie between my elementary school Afro, my junior high Kid 'n Play Hi/Lo and my senior-year cornrows.
One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Nantucket Reds, a whale belt and a cable-knit sweater over my shoulders.
Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
Are Euro kids on Newbury Street a fashion trend?
Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
If leg warmers are back in style, then pegged jeans and MC Hammer pants can't be far behind.
One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
My threadbare, incredibly comfortable Jimi Hendrix T-shirt from 10th grade—aka my last emblem of bachelorhood.
Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
Due to the size of my butt, blowing out the seat of my suit pants has happened more than once.
Where do you find the closet space?
I shamelessly steal it from my wife.

Leo Pagkaliwangan

As far ahead of the fashion curve as it's possible to be, this fourth-year business student at Northeastern University is currently wearing what the rappers, skate-punks, hipsters and Hollywood stylists will be sporting in a year or so. Born in the Philippines, he was raised all over, and he has a citizen-of-the-world approach to the way he puts himself together. Funky yet urbane whether he's dressed for a night on the town or an evening at home (in artsy Mission Hill), his intense interest in fashion and abhorrence of the ordinary add up to an arresting look that fairly defines the word cool.

Briefly describe "your look."
[The movie] Kids + military + hip-hop/hardcore/post-punk/Britpop + Japanese street.
Where do you shop?
Bodega, Stel's, online shops, Yahoo! Japan and eBay. Basically, wherever I can find the clothes I'm looking for.
Current favorite outfit?
Neighborhood pea coat, Have Heart "Boston Straight Edge" long-sleeved tee, Pure Blue Japan jeans.
Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?
Yeah, sure. I wrote a computer code that keeps track of how many times I've worn an outfit within the past few months, the dates I've worn the outfit, and the probability that I'll wear it again... Nah! I ain't give a nut.
How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?
Until it bleeds black.
Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?
Brands: W)taps, Visvim, Vans, Supreme (fall '05 was straight lovely), Alife, Masterpiece, Neighborhood, Crooks & Castles.
Designers: Hiroshi Fujiwara, Jun Takahashi, Hedi Slimane, Takahiro Miyashita, Jean Touitou, Alexandre Plokhov, Ann Demeulemeester and Helmut Lange.
Which famous person's style do you most admire?
Just one?... Hiroshi Fujiwara.
Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?
Certain people on Superfuture.com and Honeyee.com... and the homeless dude down the street.
Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?
I wore an O.A.R. shirt once, as a joke.
One style you'd never be caught dead in?
Bro' dude.
Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
Ugg boots.... I don't know what girls are thinking, but that shit's as cool as AIDS. And T-shirt companies doing Misfits references.
Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?
Grunge.
One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?
OG 1993 Sepultura—Chaos A.D. tour shirt
Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?
I'm too neat.
Where do you find the closet space?
My apartment and IKEA.

Maggie Gold-Seelig

lawyer, philanthropist

This raven-haired beauty hails from Manhattan and reflects her hometown's penchant for looking fashionable without overdoing it. A Back Bay mother of two and supporter of numerous charitable causes, she has a New Yorker's natural affinity for the effortless chic of all black, but she's not afraid to sport a bold pattern or accent her outfit using color. With a charm and wit to match her impressive wardrobe, she always looks impeccable, whether it's at a black-tie gala or a playdate with the kids.

Briefly describe "your look."

Confident, and very rarely trendy. Because I generally purchase items that are "classic," I can say that I have slacks and blazers I've been wearing for years and that I don't see giving away or archiving for years to come. People tell me that the chunky, antique Indian jewelry that my Mom has given me over the years is also my signature look.

Where do you shop?

Two words: Bergdorf Goodman. Is there anywhere else? My personal shopper, Tina Sussman, sends me clothes a few times a year. She keeps me focused on what I need to be wearing for my lifestyle. Of course, I pick up a few accessories and other items here and there—a funky shirt or skirt from Tess & Carlos, a little sweater at J.Crew, a dress at Intermix, a pocketbook at Barneys, but pretty much everything else is from Bergdorf's. When shopping for my husband, it's one stop: Louis Boston. Paul Wade in their extensive men's department is fantastic.

Current favorite outfit?

Tough question. I love many of my outfits and of course there are the different "hats" I wear that impact the answer. For a party, a fun Diane von Furstenberg dress—not the classic wrap (although I love those, too)—but this great animal print with lots of color and sparkle. It's so comfortable I feel like I'm wearing pajamas. For work, community meetings and winter, black slacks, black cashmere sweater, black leather blazer, black stiletto boots and this fantastic and large antique turquoise and silver necklace my mother gave me. For a night out, great jeans and a funky, original top. Black tie, a Marchesa Black lace gown or pretty much any Carmen Marc Valvo dress, but my all-time favorite gown is a St. John knit that looks nothing like a St. John piece. And the list could go on.

Do you rotate your wardrobe or have some system of tracking what you wore where and when? Do you care?

First, do I care what other people think? Not really. Should I? Actually, I suppose I do, but I also care about how I feel. For example, I wouldn't feel great wearing the same gown to a gala in Boston two weeks in a row, not that my husband or closest friends would think anything of it. I'd care about what people I don't know would think, which is clearly something I need a psychiatrist to analyze. I do, however, wear about 10 or 15 different regular/everyday outfits on a rotation, so chances are, you'll see me wear an ensemble twice in just over a two-week period. Other than black-tie events, which are just a few a year, I truly don't think much about what I wear.

How many times do you wear something before retiring it for good?

In the past five years or so, I haven't retired any significant pieces in my wardrobe. Some of the trendier things have made a graceful exit to Goodwill or to a friend, but I think the best thing about my wardrobe is that it comprises things that are forever wearable—or at least worthy of being archived and "reborn" in a few years' time.

Which designers/brands/labels do you favor?

Akris for slacks and blazers. Loro Piano for jackets and wraps (the most delicious cashmere). Etro for blazers and colorful tops. Citizens of Humanity, Seven and Goldsign for denim. Hermès for leather goods. I have a few funky tops from local designer Daniela Corte that I absolutely love and always get compliments on.

Which famous person's style do you most admire?

Jonathan Soroff. Seriously? I admire Madonna's style, and all of her changes throughout the years. Isn't style supposed to be about feeling good at that particular moment, and looking the way you want the world to see you? Plus, her music rocks.

Do you emulate anyone or use them as a mental template?

I wear what I feel good in, not what looks good on someone else.

Biggest fashion faux pas you ever made?

Acid-washed jeans in the '80s. It only lasted a second, but that was one second more than was necessary.

One style you'd never be caught dead in?

Skinny jeans. I truly believe that almost everyone reading this will agree, or at least they should.

Fashion trend you're sick to death of?

See previous answer. A close second would be the whole skull thing, although I must admit I have three pieces with skulls that I love!

Fashion trend that's ripe for a comeback?

Can't really think of one, although I do seriously appreciate that the whole animal-print thing is back. For me, it never went away, but it's so nice that it's so readily available from almost every major designer and store.

One thing that killed you to give to Goodwill?

I don't mind giving things to Goodwill, or other organizations like Hadassah or Dress for Success. However, one thing that killed me to give away to a friend was a great pair of black Gucci slacks. They were a bit snug after I gave birth to my first child, and they looked so great on my friend that I felt I shouldn't keep them hanging dormant in my closet when she could be out looking fabulous in them. I am way too good a friend.

Most regrettable rip/pull/stain you remember?

I was wearing a gorgeous silk halter dress to a wedding five weeks after giving birth to my first child, whom I was nursing. For those of you who've nursed, you know exactly what happened, and for those of you who haven't, ask a friend.

Where do you find the closet space?

After years of having half of my clothes in my husband's closet, we finally built one big enough. I also have a cedar closet for off-season items. It's become clear to me that the key to a good marriage is not communication, proactiveness and all that touchy-feely crap. The real key is separate closets. IB year ago, I wrote a piece for the IMPROPER about being a style pariah. Since then I've earned an Associate's Degree in taste—granted, I ordered it on the Internet—and am ready to share my knowledge with other fashion lepers, in the hopes of helping them live with a little more dignity. While I can't promise any miracle cures, following these guidelines will at least allow those with deformed apparel sense to move through normally dressed society without blinding anyone or causing them to convulse and die.

Simple tips for the terminally unstylish

BY SAM WALTERS ILLUSTRATION BY KATE WILLIAMSON

Dress like a jerk.

The problem with most people who don't know how to dress is that they don't push it far enough. Merely matching a Hawaiian shirt with slacks and running shoes will render you unstylish. However, push that look over the edge by adding a plaid blazer, a monocle and a fedora with a lit sparkler in the hatband, and you'll elevate yourself to fashion trendsetter! The key is to look like nothing anyone's ever seen before—ideally like an extraterrestrial lunatic. That way others won't have any barometer to gauge the fashionableness of your attire, and will have to wait until the proper fashion authorities weigh in, at which point you, the style pioneer, simply "evolve" your look to the next most ridiculous thing you can think of.

Neutral colors don't go together.

The inverse of the dress-like-a-jerk principle, matching so-called "neutral colors" is a fashion crime according to my girlfriend, who's a stern judge of these things. I could sooner guess the contents of the Loch Ness monster's stomach than what constitutes a neutral color, but I seem to lay hands on at least three of them any time I put together an outfit that looks even vaguely sensible to me. I matched brown and tan the other day and my girlfriend broke a chair over my head.

She has "nothing" in her closet.

Despite having 10 armoires full of clothes packed so tightly nuclear fusion could occur, your woman has nothing to wear. Never mind that she's hogged a full fifth of all the clothes on the planet and there are whole continents of people walking around naked as jaybirds as a result; the only garment appropriate for the evening resides with a witch doctor living at the foot of a volcano on an uncharted Caribbean island, and without this magical vestment she could no sooner exit the house than she could fly with the eagles. As for shoes, why, she would rather cut off her feet and go out on stumps than wear any of the 350 pairs she owns.

Man-bags are for girls.

I appreciate the effort to expand gender boundaries for accoutrement, but despite its surprising tenacity, the man-bag is simply a failed concept. No matter how masculine the items carried therein, if it looks like a giant purse then, by god, it is a giant purse. A man could pull a double-barreled shotgun from inside one of these sissy sacks and it would register about as much as a tube of lipstick. That the man is probably wearing a blouse doesn't help the issue.

Women must straighten/curl their hair.

The most horrible thing in a woman's world is either straight or curly hair, depending on which she's afflicted with. When the first face transplant happened, I actually overheard two women seriously discussing whether the same procedure was viable for whole heads, and whether they would be candidates on the grounds of having "hideous" hair. My girlfriend has a straightening method more epic than the building of the pyramids; it takes as long, too. She washes her hair, dries it, combs it, applies gobbledygoop, mumbles some spells, dries and combs it again, before finally frying it in what looks like a George Foreman grill. She must do this anytime we go out, and anything less will leave her so unsatisfied she's liable to stab anyone who compliments her.

If you're actually wondering whether combing it over to the side is an option, stop reading. You are damned.

Men shouldn't comb their hair.

The only men left in all of America who continue to comb their hair are Republican congressmen, and they're not very popular right now (nor were they ever masters of style). This isn't to say a man should leave his hair as is when he rises in the morning. Instead, immediately upon waking, he must hurry to the bathroom, photograph his head from every angle, and then post these prints on the wall. After massaging a tube of guacamole/bullshit "product" through his hair, he must set about meticulously re-creating his initial bedhead from the pictures, using tweezers and a jeweler's loupe. He should attempt to cultivate an air of contrived un-contrivance that says, "World, I don't give a damn—but really, how do I look?"

Men who are losing their hair should just shave it.

If you haven't sufficient hair to falsify a full mop, just shave or buzz whatever's left. I used to try to spike up the remaining patches of hair on my skull. This worked decently in the dark of a bar, but normal light sliced through the illusion, revealing a scalp that looked ravaged by mange. The shrieks of a woman who thinks she's taken home a handsome, wispy-haired stranger, only to flip on the light and find she's bedding down with the son of the Crypt Keeper, are a memory you don't want. Growing it on the sides and back will only make you look like a monk, which also won't help your game. Combing it straight back will make you look like a coke dealer, which could help your game right up until the point when you're expected to produce some drugs. If you're actually wondering whether combing it over to the side is an option, stop reading. You are damned.

Beards are in.

At the moment this is only true for men, but give it a year and I'm sure women will be popping testosterone to join in the craze. The look is particularly popular among hipsters in their 20s, though I'm not sure why anyone would want to reference what their dad probably looked like in the '70s—unless, of course, he was a porn star. In that case, I think stuffing one's jeans with a kielbasa should be required.

Tattoos are great—in moderation.

Granted, tattoos are becoming so commonplace even Bill O'Reilly now boasts a bitchin' tribal piece on his right bicep. But "going under the gun" retains an inherent coolness. That said, it should be noted that tattoos are indeed highly addictive, and a moratorium between acquiring new pieces is advisable. I recently went on an ink bender that saw my tatt total climb from three to 12, including a giant, spoked circle on my chest that I wanted to embody the Buddhist concept of dharma. My friends, however, call it the "wheel of dicks."

We're running out of things to pierce.

This is more an observation, but as the piercing fad continues to rage unchecked, we'll soon be out of anatomy for piercing innovators to hang junk off. I've seen faces that looked like jungle gyms, and even pictures of private parts so run through with metal they qualify as bionic. ("Go go gadget—" well, you know.) Perhaps the new direction will be to sport ever-heavier piercings. We may shortly see people dangling engine blocks or even whole motorcycles from their noses.

I am a congenital dork.

Yes, I've learned many things about style in the past year. But then, I know many things about baseball, including the fact that, despite my sizable knowledge of the sport, I couldn't hope to hit a baseball even if I strapped my limbs to David Ortiz. I believe somewhere in the brain there is a style lobe, and in order for that piece of anatomy to form, two well-matched strands of DNA must come together in the womb to combine into one good-looking chromosome. Unfortunately for me, my DNA wore neutral colors. IB

This Boston-educated designer is leading the charge to put American men's classics back on the map.

MICHAEL BASTIAN: MODERN PREPSTER

BY VICTOR VARGAS PHOTOGRAPHED BY KEN PAO

With only two collections under his belt, Michael Bastian is already being called "the future of American design." That's no small feat when you consider that the designer, who holds a marketing degree from Babson College in Wellesley, neither sews nor draws. He is, however, an expert in men's fashion: Having served as the men's fashion director for New York City's Bergdorf Goodman, arguably the world's best department store, Bastian has a keen sense of what men want. And not just any men, but the ones with expendable income and discriminating taste. It's no surprise, then, that his collection is made with both the best fabrics and attention to detail. What's refreshing is how he presents a modern, comfortable look, mixing refined and casual elements: His collection includes Italian tailoring such as high armholes and suits with fitted silhouettes, fitted shirts with a discreet vent to allow for movement, a buttonless rugby shirt in cashmere, the perfect pair of chinos—as well as playful T-shirts with messages written backward, intended for the wearer's enjoyment when looking in the mirror. If you follow his advice, you can hang onto your best old stuff too: Bastian believes in keeping your favorite pieces forever (your tattered lucky sweater, for example). He spoke to us from Italy, where he was selecting fabrics for his new collection.

Your collection is a revision of American classics. What inspired you to do that?
When I was at Bergdorf Goodman, we constantly ran into a lack of well-made wardrobe staples. They were either too expensive, or ill-fitting, or conceived with a European sensibility that rendered them impractical for the American lifestyle. Chinos, for example, would end up being made in a fabric that was too lightweight or with a huge logo on them—not what the chino client was looking for.

You've said, "The mid-'80s was the last great moment in American menswear." Can you elaborate on that and the designers who took us there?
That was the last time when the world was looking to America for menswear. Calvin Klein, Ralph Lauren and Perry Ellis were all new, and they set the tone back then. Calvin was the sexy one, Ralph the traditionalist and Perry was in-between, which was sexy and very American. Perry Ellis always had the best fabrics, beautiful hand-knits and the perfect oxford shirt.

What are the essential components of the modern man's wardrobe?
Most men only wear 10 percent of their clothes, so that narrows it down to a navy sport coat, good jeans, a down vest, a navy cashmere crew, a good pair of chinos and a good, slim button-down shirt.

What's your view on black-tie?
I think it's very interesting, what's going on with black-tie right now. You can wear a tux shirt without ironing it—roll up the sleeves and it looks great with a pair of jeans. You can also do a tux pant with a simple T-shirt and sandals, and that also looks great.

What about suits?
There was a time when the coolest guy at the bar was the one without a tie, and now the coolest guy is often the young guy in a suit. It's also a generational thing. I'd say that most guys over 50 had to wear a suit and find it liberating not to, whereas young guys have never had to wear a suit and find it interesting to do so.

What are the best shoes and why?
I love a heavy cordovan shoe, either a loafer or a wing tip. Alden makes the best one, and they've been making them forever. Men need a good, heavy, masculine shoe.

Directional designers in Paris and Milan have started to show exaggerated versions of the pleated pant. Do you think it's a passing trend (as is apparently the case with skinny jeans), or is the pleat coming back to claim its place?
Pleats with a high waist are terrible, but add a low waist to a pleated pant and it looks sexy. I never propose something that I wouldn't wear myself, and I have pleated pants in my fall collection. I ran around in them for a couple of days and felt good about them. The top you wear with pleated pants should always be slim, so the play with proportion is flattering.

As you were designing your spring/summer 2007 collection, what inspired you?
It started out with Jaws—the movie. It was 1975, and the look was preppy before preppy was an idea. The proportions were different, but it was all there. I also looked at a photo of Robert Rauschenberg in the '60s, and he basically looked like a math teacher. So here was this cutting-edge artist who choose to present himself in a very clean way. He wore big, baggy chinos and a shrunken sweatshirt. I reinterpreted that look, of course. You don't want to look like he did in the '60s.

You've added swimwear to the spring/summer collection. Are you thinking Speedos or board shorts?
A shorter running short is looking hot to me right now. I'd say only about 1 percent of the population looks good in a Speedo.
